Union chief urges vote for

Liberals
By Paul Routledge

Labour was hit by fresh internal trouble yesterday after it was disclosed that a leading trade union leader on the right of the party is advising many of his members to vote Liberal.

Mr Roy Grantham, general ecretary of the Association of secretary of the Association of Professional, Executive, Clerical and Computer Staff, which has 123,000 members, has urged tactical working in an article in his mion journal. He tells clerical workers in the South and West that voting for the Liberals where they have a the Liberals where they have a chance of unseating the Tories 'is good sense".

Mr Grantham's remarks Mr Grantman s remarks are printed just above an advertisement in the APEX journal placed by the Labour Party, which urges: "Think positive, vote Labour". The bulk of his article is taken ap with arguments to do just that "if you want a caring, economically-sane Government com-mitted to a realistic defence policy, not to a jingoistic theme of massing up more and more nuclear warheads."

But the Liberals are pleased that their campaign to persuade the electorate to make use of tactical voting has found an echo in such a highly-placed Labour quarter.

Mr Paul Tyler, former Liberal MP for Bodmin in the 1974 Parliament, told The Times that mass defections of working people from Labour in Devon and Coruwall could hand the Alliance at least half of the 16 seats there.

With about 60,000 Israelis gathering in Tel Aviv on Saturday night, for a mass anti-war rally, the domestic dissension over the continued in-volvement in Lebanon has provided a sharp reminder to the Government of the growing unpopularity of the army's presence there.

Sources close to Mr Mena chem Begin, the Prime Minis-ter, reacted angrily to the weekend of national soul searching which also saw the planting of two of the largest booby-trap bombs smuggled into Jerusalem for several years. Both were safely defused.

Following critical analysis which included a four-hour programme on Israel Radio, government officials said: "The orgy of published and broadcast evaluations of the Lebanon was this weekend is harmful to vital Israeli interests and can only make the resolution of the conflict more difficult". Observers noted that the bitter debate has done more than anything in recent months to point up the deep divisions now threatening the fabric of Israeli society. Many of the local criticisms have been equally, if not more, hostile than those voiced abroad, The officials reflecting the view of Mr Begin commented with a note of exasperation: The Syrians are standing on the sidelines and are watching us with bemused delight. Why should they budge from their position, and evacuate Lebanon, when they can read about discord and dissension in Israel? Why should they pull out if there is pressure in Israel for unconditional withdrawal?"

The protests continued vesterday as more reserve soldiers and officers who have pledged to return their Lebanon campaign ribbons to the Defence Ministry, demonstrated outside Cabinet meeting Calls for Mr Begin's resig-

But what to make of this connexion with the Caribbean and with HTLV? Is it merely circumstantial? Aids nations circumstantial? Aids patients suffer a collapse in the production of certain white blood cells, the T-helper cells, which normally help the antibodies of the immune system attack invading organisms. The patients fall ill because of of a failure to repel the many microscopic invaders we are all subject to every day.

HTLV could be just one of these invaders. And the link with Haiti might just be a statistical fluke. However, there is other evidence. One in four male homosexuals suffering from Aids in the United States has antibodies against HTLV, showing that their bodies have begun a defence against it; but only one in 80 Aids-free homosexuals had the anti-bodies, according to an Ameri-can study recently published in Science. This suggests that only the Aids patients had been exposed to the virus.

In other American work, two out of 33 Aids patients were found to harbour the genes of HTLV, which inte-grate themselves into the genetic material of the human T-cells. And in French work, one case has been indentified as linked with HTLV, and another with a closely-related

Indeed this last clue may indicate why the evidence so far the HTLV-Aids link has been partial: perhaps there is a whole class of viruses like HTLV, but not exactly similar to it, which can infect the T-ceils. Different members of the class might induce slightly different antibodies, or have different genetic sequences, so eluding too-precisely defined

However, there are still many uncertainties. HTLV was first indentified as the cause of a rare form of leukaemia in Japan. It also particularly in Haiti. But in Japan, the virus does not appear to cause Aids; and infection with HTLV often caused no symptons of any the country's top law officer will figure in an historic appeal hearing at the High Court in Edinburgh tomorrow.

Lord Emslie, the Lord Justice-General, will preside over a panel of three senior judges hearing the Crown's appeal against the acquittal of eight hespital laboratory technicians hospital laboratory technicians charged under the 108-year-old Conspiracy Act. The charges followed a work-in at laboratories at the Victoria Hospital, Kirkcaldy.

The Crown, which has confirmed that the issues raised by the case "have certainly not been tested in Scotland before", is expected to be represented by Lord Mackay, the Lord Advo-cate. Lord Emslie will be joined on the bench by Lord Cameron and Lord Avonside. The fact that Scotland's highest judicial authority and prosecutor are both involved underlines the importance of the case which could have far-reaching implications throughtout Britain. The laboratory workers will be represented by Mr Hugh Morton QC. The technicians were arrested after police swooped to end the work-in at dawn on September 25 last year.

Seven women and five men were charged under the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, but the case against one man was temporarily deserted because of ill health and three women were cleared when the Crown accepted there was insufficient evidence against them. After a two-week adjourn-ment, Sheriff William Christie acquitted the remaining four men and four women at Kirkcaldy Sheriff Court on March 8 In his written judgement, he upheld Mr Morton's motion that there was insufficient evidence to establish that a contravention of Section 7 of the Act had taken place.

The Home Office has said the inquest will provide an inde-pendent inquiry. Mr Raymond Kidwell, for Dr Douglas Cham-bers, the coroner, told the High Court however that the hearing would be a long way short of the sort of public inquiry that the campaigners were seeking. The commission urged that an independent inquiry into policing in Hackney and Stoke Newington should be held to establish why relations between the community and police there were so bad and getting worse, when relations elsewhere in London were improving.

Relations have not been ased by a dispute between Hackney council and the Home Office over the setting up of a police/community consultative group. The left-wing council wants to use the GLC model, and make such a group a subcommittee of its police committee, while the Home Office wants the group to be indepen-dent of council control.

ROTE SLAND CAUSE

Scotland Yard to take lessons from US vietims on investigating crime

American work study experts are to trin Scotland Yard detectives in the latest techniques for assessing and handling intelligence data, based on methods developed for the Pentagon and the counterespionage community.

The techniques, widely used among federal and state law enforcement agencies in the US are being brought to Europe for the first time. They could revolutionize criminal Livestigation over the next decade.

A very small scheme using the techniques was started several years ago after officers visited police in New Jersey, but the decision to widen their use was taken last autumn by Sir Kenneth Newman, the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police. An outline was included in the "action plan" drawn up for the force and the Home Office gave its approval several months ago.

This autumn some 50 officers, drawn from the specialist detective squads and the new teams set up in the four London police areas to tackle street crime, will begin training under the tuition of staff from Anacapa Sciencies, a company, based in Santa Barbara, Califor-

Anacapa's work would help to achieve this by moving Scotland Yard away from the traditional approach of collectng information, filing it and then producing it after a crime. Instead, the information would be put together to build up a picture of suspected criminals with their associates before a crime was committed.

An investigation could then manpower to chase down dozens of leads thrown up by the traditional methods. The head of the investigation might be provided with a more

Cruise men bring housing shortage

By Baron Phillips Property Correspondent

The accelerating cruise missile programme at Greenham Common, near Newbury, is sending property prices soaring and creating a serious local housing shortage.

American servicemen are baving to rent or buy homes up to 24 miles away from the camp where the missiles will be based after Christmas. There are now 1,100 airforce personnel on the base, but that figure is expected to double over the next two years while the total American population, including dependants, in and around Newbury will rise to about 5,000.

Naturally, the United States Air Force is keen to play down the impact of the rapidly expanding base. But Lieutenant Bryan Irving, camp spokesman, admitted; "We recognize there is a housing problem in the area, but I feel we are only aggravating a problem which was already here".

The USAF has had recalculate the number of private homes it will have to rent for its people over the next two years and the present estimate of 300 is based on the assumption that Congress will approve spending on at least 250 family houses on HMS Dauntless, a former Navy base, at near by Burghfield, Lieutenant Irving conceded that they do not know when, or even if the money will be allocated.

There are now 600 families living outside military accommodation and, as further delays occur on the building pro-gramme, more families will have to find homes on the open

Ms Alison Salmon, a Shelter officer in Newbury, said there has been a growing homelessness problem in the area since the base began to expand. Mr Terry McColl, deputy director of housing at Newbury District Council, agreed that the housing waiting list was growing and there had been a rapid increase in the number of homeless people coming to the council.

In the past, the council has been able to rent private homes to accommodate people on their waiting lists. That source has now dried up because there is a huge demand for these houses at much higher prices than the council can afford.

There is also a shortage of building land for public or private homes. Newbury Council has asked the Government for a special £10m housing provision because it is concerned about dwindling stocks of council-owned homes

The allegations are made in evidence submitted by Inquest, which is funded partly by Greater London Council to Sh James Hennessey, the Chief Inspector for Prisons, who has been instructed by Mr William Whitelaw, the Honie Secretary to investigate safeguards against suicide in prisons. Mr Tony Ward, of Inquest, said surgical stitching without annesthetic was a "biatantly punitive, not to say sadistic practice." It made a mockery of Mr Foot rates a low showing in both advantages and disad-vantages, though he is reason-ably favoured for his understanding of world and domestic problems. But the most spec-tacular response is to Mr Steel, who commands high ratings in most of the positive areas, and avoids the bad marks.

Yet this fails to show through in the Alliance's standing; only the 15-24 group think less of them than do the over-55s.

Although the over-55s may have made a marked shift further towards the Conservatives in the lifetime of the present Government, overall they remain the least volatile of the electoral age groups, and doggedly aloof from the issues which one might expect to engage their attention. They are no more or less interested in the health service than the rest of the electorate, although they are its greatest users.

One of the few areas in which their views are distinct is in the media coverage of the election: they feel very strongly the there has been too much election news on television and in the

Doubtful future for welfare state's gem

The National Health Service has been described as the greatest piece of social engineering in our time and the jewel in the crown of the welfare state. Yet its futre is one of the cardinal issues of the election campaign on which the political parties are making different has a policy for health. The individual topics are

The tone of the argument was set in an exchange between Mr Michael Foot and Mrs Thatcher had "left behind in the pigeon-holes that old think tank report which proposed attacks on the social services and disruption of the National Health Service". He wanted to know why she broke a promise at the last election not to raise prescription charges and then increased them to £1.40.

.Mrs Thatcher retorted that spending on the NHS was at a record level. She said no responsible government could ever promise not to increase prescription charges. The importent thing was exemptions

While the Conservatives insist that they have made imprecedented increases in real terms on funding for health, Labour and the Alliance pour scorn on the statistical methods.

Nevertheless, the Conservatives are stating in their election literature that they have in-creased spending over the past four years by £7,750m.

to Mr Peter Shore's latest onslaught on public expenditure is unlikely to have much, if any, bearing on the outcome of the election. But it may well influence the terms on which a second Thatcher administration is able to govern.

Mr Shore yesterday dis-closed the texts of three official papers that were presented to the Cabinet last September.

One was a report by an interdepartmental group of officials on public expenditure trends for the rest of this decade; another was a note by the Treasury on the implications of its report for taxation; and the third was an accompanying comment from the Chancellor himself, warning his colleagues of the radical decisions that might have to be taken on public spending.

Not only the existence, but also the substance of these papers was already well known. So Mr Shore has hurled a surprise bombshell into the closing days of the campaign. In purely electioneering terms, it ought to be possible for the Conservatives simply to shring off this attack - especially given the ascendancy that they have already established.

'We have laid out our plans'

"We have laid out our plans for the next three years on government spending", Mrs Margaret Thatcher told Mr Brian Walden on Weekend Borid yesterday. They are there for everyone to see, for everyone to discuss".

She has been able to take refuge in that kind of comment at her news conferences so far, as she was able to take refuge in it yesterday. She may well continue to get away with it over the next few days. But she ought not to be allowed to do so, and it may well be in her own interest not to do so.

She ought not to get away with a reference to the next does not meet the charge. Sir Geoffrey Howe warned his Cabinet colleagues last September that "we need to take a new and fundamental look at levels of public spending". He was clearly looking ahead to the second half of the 1980s in case the more optimistic assumptions of economic growth did not materialize.

In other words, the Chancellor was suggesting that the Cabinet should consider possibly umplessant policy decisions which might have to be taken in the near future if public spending was to be kep under reasonable control in the Country should be told of change

It may be that Sir Geoffrey no longer believes that such decisions will be necessary because he now takes a more favourable view of the prospects for growth. In which case there is no reason why the country should not be told.

But what if the Chancellor's gloomy assessment of ladt remains Government's thinking? This would mean that probably within one year, and certainly within two, the Cabinet would be asked to consider policy changes of which there has been no whisper during the election campaign.

Mrs Thatcher would be able Avrshi that she had told no falsehood: thepolicy changes that would then be under discussion need not affect the spending plans for the next three years that have already been published. She would have a complete defence if new and unforceseen circumstances had arisen.

Feeling of being misled

But there would be a feeling that the country had been misled if it had not been told of pending cots that ministers already knew, on the basis of present trends, would have to be decided fairly early in the life of the new government only after these next three

VCRIS. In such circumstances, one of two things would happen. Mrs Thatcher might press on regardless, thereby undermining her authority and credibility. Or the Government might hesitate to take unpopular steps which it believed to be icessary. It would be in the national interest, and ultimately in the best interest of the Conservatives, for them to conduct themselves in this campaign 50 as to give the next government the authority to take the measures they judge to be

Low turnout for Foot as jobs march reaches a damp end

By John Young

The rain returned to London misled by opinion polls. "Pretty esterday as between 15-20,000 cople converged on Hyde Park for a rally to mark the climax of the People's March for Jobs.

The unofficial target of the organizers had orignally been 250,000, and although the election was expected to mean many political activists would be too busy to attend, the turnout will still be seen as a blow to the labour movement. Despite 3 large number of speakers, including Mr Michael Foot, it was a surprisingly lowkey, unemotional occasion. The marchers filed in, carrying banners and wearing bright yellow tee-shirts, but most seemed more weary and dispiri-ted than fired with zeal for Speaking from the top of an open bus, Mr Michael Foot claimed that by the end of the year another 300,000 people would be added to the already record total of unemployed.

Referring to the election, he urged his audience not to be well the only place where there has not been increased unemployment during the Thatcher era is among people drawing up opinion polls" he said. But the marchers' representative on the platform, Miss Christina Pavli, of Haringey, London, seemed to distance berself from the political tone adopted by other speakers when she said the march was not supposed to be in support of the Labour Party, it was to protest against unemployment, and many of those taking part were not involved in politics.

Mr Len Murray, general secretary of the Trades Union Congress, said the message of the marchers was that people were no longer prepared to bare their backs to the scourge of unemployment. The rally was to protest on behalf of the nation, which had been cheated of the work of the four million unemployed and the wealth they might have contributed to

Labour told to focus on unemployment

By Paul Routledge, Labour Editor

Labour leaders desperate to stem the haemhorrage of voting support told their candidates yesterday to play up the risk to jobs if the Conservatives win a second term of office. The spectre of two million more people unemployed is being

In its daily campaign briefing for candidates, the Labour Party said: "From now until polling day, our campaign must focus on the issues that matter, and on the policies that will attract the voters. Nothing else."

Chief among these is unemployment, and the party insists: We must deal a hammer blow to the Tory message of fatalism and despair, that there is no alternative to mass unemployment and social decay." The internal briefing paper tells Labour candidates to argue that government policies have helped to destroy 2.4 million jobs, and if the Conservatives get back they will follow the s policies. "Nearly two million more jobs would be at risk", the document says. The party claims that 370,000 jobs are threatened in the public services and that spending cuts out. The briefing paper says that 380,000 jobs are vulnerable in public industries. Planned pit closures would cut 50,000 jobs in the coal industry, another 20,000 would go through the further run-down of state steel and 30,000 more from the "overmanned" railways.

There would be a cut of 18,000 jobs from the armed forces and dockyards; 40,000 jobs "would be exported to the USA" with the purchase of Trident submarines; and a further 120,000 jobs would be slashed in gas, electricity, public transport and the postal service.

It also claims that 790,000 jobs are at risk in the manufac-turing industry. "Nearly a quarter of Britain's large indus-trial companies are in serious financial distress and less than half are expected to survive.

"Foty large firms are being kept affoat in a lifeboat launched by the Bank of England, and over 1,000 companies have been taken into intensive care by the banks. Together, these firms employ some 1,250,000 people. If the Tories are reelected, many will close. High risk sectors are

The party urges candidates to make the point: "That adds up to nearly two million jobs at risk if the Tories get back." Labour's briefing paper admits that "some new jobs will be created in growth sectors" but insists that these will not exceed 240,000 "on even the most optimistic projections".

Labour's new slogan is therefore: "Sack the Tories before they sack you".

One hundred miles to the west, in the Vale of Evesham, Peter Walker, Secretary of State for Agriculture, is doing a door to door canvass in a tiny village, conducted at a trot.

There is no sign in Mr Walker's manner of a man who has been in Parliament since 1961 and first entered the Cabinet as far back as 1970. He tackles his canvassing as though he were a first-time candidate trying to earn the right to contest a winnable seat in the next election. Both of them have safe Conservative majorities. In the last Parliament Worcester returned Mr Walker with a majority of over 11,000, while in Cambridgeshire Mr Pym's majority was twice that size. However, both constituencies have been affected by boundary changes which are expected to reduce the natural Conservative majority in Mr Pym's seat, now called Cambridgeshire South-East, but to have a more or less

How the chief opinion polls have reflected party fortunes since

Mr Michael Foot's cam-paign enters the final straight today in an air of persisting unreality, with the Labour, leader banking on optimistic reports of support for the party from local officials being translated into votes on Thursday.

The campaign trail has been punctuated by enthusiastic, packed rallies and party workers telling Mr Foot that the opinion polls do not reflect their canvass returns.

He has been impressed by their findings but now has finally acknowledged that yesterday's polls showing Labour heading for a disas-trous defeat could not all be "cooked", an ailegation he made last week

A tired-looking Mr Foot told journalists as he travelled by train from Edinburgh to Newcastle upon Tyne on Saturday night that the party faced "a hell of a job" if it was to win, but then added that he believed Labour could win the "don't knows" with its arguments on unemployment.

His three-week tour has been largely devoid of contro-versy, sparkle and direction. On occasions it, and Mr Foot, have come to life, but there appears to have been a conscious decision to run a low-key campaign.

That has been justified by party strategists with the argument that the anemploy-ment issue would win Labour the election. It is noticeable that in Mr Foot's speeches, which have become increasingly lacklustre and rambling, there is virtually no reference to his political opponents in the Alliance parties, and his attacks on Mrs Thatcher have been muted. Mr -foot's personal low-key campaign was also designed to limit the number of "own goals" by the Labour leader.

Hopeful Steel in strategy talks

By Michael Knipe Mr David Steel presided over a strategy meeting of the SDP/Liberal Alliance leadership last night with the satisfaction of having seen his cautious prediction of the Alliance's standing in the opinion polls largely confirmed.

Throughout last week he said he would be happy to see the Alliance reach 25 per cent by the weekend, which it did in the Sunday Times Mori Poll, while sunday Mirror's Marplan gave it 27.5 per cent, a half point ahead of Labour. The Liberal leader, who is also leader of the Alliance's election comparison has stressed

Mr Steel expects the Alliance bandwagon to pick up speed as voters realize the extent of Labour's loss of support and

Admission by Healey

The first admission by the Labour leadership that they Labour leadership that they could be losing anti-Conserva-tive votes to the Alliance, particularly in Conservative marginals was made last night by Mr Denis Healey, deputy leader of the party.

Returning to his own constituency in Leeds East for the first time since the campaign started, Mr Healey said that some voters were turning to the Alliance as the party with the best chance of fending off a new and extreme Tory Government. People were deeply worried at the prospect of a Conservative victory which would bring a "one-woman dictatorship backed by the provo wing of the Conservative Party."

fears of a Labour challenge give way to fears of a Conservative landslide. Expressing the hope that many moderate Conservative supporters might yet swing their backing behind the Alliance, Mr Steel said yesterday during an Independent Radio News phone-in that a lot of Conservative voters would be "actually appalled" at the thought of the kind of policies that would be pursued by a Conservative government with a majority of landslide proportions. Those voters might well decide, he said, that they would rather have a strong moderating

Angola regime shaken by diamonds scandal By a Special Correspondent

Five pilots of the Angolan airline TAAG are said to have been arrested and five others have chosen to remain outside Angola. More significantly, five or six senior MPLA officials are said to have been detained. The scandal, which has not yet been made public, is threatening to bring into the open the whole question of the national leadership. There are suggestions that President dos Santos may stay in titular control by that some of his executive powers may be devolved upon a college of veterans within the 11-man MPLA political bureau, the country's senior organization. This would forestall the risk of a coup reported to have been under discussion among younger Army officers frustrated by an alleged lack of direction and decisiveness at the top.

The diamond scandal came to a head when the Minister of Mines and Industries, Lieutenant-Colonel Bento Ribeiro, called in British mining police to help stop smuggling in the eastern Lunda province, bordering Zambia and Zaire.

The mine police, together with their Angolan counterspecialist school in Britain, are reported to have reduced the smuggling appreciably.

Reports from within the ruling MPLA suggest that the authority of President Jose Eduardo dos Santos of Angola may be undermined by a diamond scandal implicating senior officials in his own S&#m (£17m-£57m); have been losing company, between $60m and entourage. With Octopussy, which has its charity première at the Odeon, Leicester Square, tonight, the cinematic success story of James Bond comes of age. David Hewson flushes out 007 himself

Sadism for the whole family

Caparisoned in Jermyn Street finery, possessed of an irresistible lure to women and endowed with eternal good fortune. Mr James Bond, of Her Majesty's Secret Service, tonight makes his thirteenth entrance into the cinematic lists via

One may sniff at 007, and there are plenty of reasons to do so in the lesser moments of his film career, but no one can take from him his success. The Bond series is the most successful film cycle ever to come out of Britain, and one launched on the modest basis of the Eady Levy, the tax on cinema seats which returns funds to producers in relation to the popularity af their product. Today, 21 years since Sean Connery first strolled on to the screen and ordered a dry Martini, shaken not stirred, is as great as ever.

Later this year Connery will return in the role in a Bond rival which has caused considerable chagrin to MGM/UA, the company behind Roger Moore and Octopussy. Talk of the battle of the Bonds, though, has been much exaggerated. Connery and Moore are old friends, and have been privately swapping stories of the physical difficulties their relative schedules have demanded during filming.

At the moment, discussions are going on to find a suitable vehicle to accommodate what Hollywood views as its three most bankable British stars: Connery, Moore and Michael Caine. In spite of some of the backchat being aimed in Connery's direction, the probability is that he is as much in line for success as Moore.

What Connery's return will serve to emphasize is the fact that the character of Bond, attractive as it may be to the public, is as fluid as its market demands. Little of the original Fleming is intact. Moore, who admits that Fleming has never been his favourite reading, says: "I looked through a few books when I was given the role. There's nothing about Bond in them."

Connery's portrayal, with its mixture of humour, cruelty and cynicism, must remain the actor's Bond. By comparison, Moore is something of a pussycat. Connery is the adult Bond; the political and sexual elements of his films, notably From Russia With Love, continue to say much about the Cold War period finding itself amid the birth of the permissive Sixties. Moore may give a half-hearted lecture on the dangers of unilateralism in Octopussy but he remains safe family. entertainment, When President Reagan goes on record as admiring Moore's Bond as a guardian of freedom, the transformation is complete. Connery's character was never the sort to win official approval.

What has turned the Moore films into. such a successful production cycle is the reworking of the old mixture of sex, thrills, exotic locations and comedy. The first 15 minutes of Octopusty are masterly, notably for the visual jokes which, at their best, are on a par with the kind of complex pyrotechnics seen in Chuck Jones's Road Runner Cartoons for Warner Brothers.

Moore likes the cartoon analogy. "We are not Peckinpah - there is very little blood and we don't lay the violence on with the trowel. But you've got to remember that there are some countries where they ban Tom and Jerry for the violence. We fill it up with a lot of jokes that's what makes the violence acceptable.

Moore shows a delicate decorum when uestioned about the President of America iving such a glowing testimonial. Reagan said what Leslic Charteris said about the Saint - he's a modern-day Robin Hood Well. I haven't seen Bond doing too much robbing the rich to feed the poor, but maybe Robin Hood didn't either. Bond is not really a spy. Spies are faceless. I can't walk into any bar in the world without some girl knowing that I take a Martini shaken not stirred."

And he is equally disarming about the relative merits of financial security against professional acclaim. "I always wanted to have a career like Rex Harrison, who was an actor who made movies. It didn't work out that way - I'm a movie actor. The longer I am away from the theatre the more nervous I am about going back, I should get out and exercise my legs, but I'm so exhausted by the time I finish a picture. I don't want to go and rehearse a play - Fd much rather enjoy myself. Fd be a sitting duck - the critics would love to think here's a bloody movie actor on the stage. Then I have the habit of working in films where, if someone drops a hammer, I stop. I could see myself in the theatre stopping every time someone went to the toilet. If circumstances financially said I had to get off my bum and do a play, would have done it.

"But they never have - it's a double-edged sword. Bond doesn't win awards, except perhaps for the song and the special effects. It's like Spielberg - the ones the public really like never get the award. I can't understand that."

Somebody said that one should never trust a man who starts the working day with his shirt-collar button undone and his tie loosened. David Bowie took the stage in London last week, for the first time in five years, with his bow-tie already hanging loose. Possibly he does not know how to knot a proper bow-tie; at any rate, it see an appropriate symbol for the father of modern pop poseology, the man who turned attitude into art and taught Brecht to

You could tell from the full cut of his trousers that he had been away. No one who was in Britain a couple of years ago, when Blue Rondo à la Turk and their pais were discrediting the zoot-suit as a hot fashion item, would have turned up in the baggy yellow affair with which he began this concert, or the pale green braided example which succeeded it after the intermission. It seemed strange, too, that he should choose to they commenced the two-hour event by sounding exactly like Roy Wood's Wizzard, circa 1971: braying saxophones, tinny drums, toneless guitars, half-scrambled backing vocals. This was a Grade A mess, unfocused, unbalanced and completely lacking in the power necessary to surround and support Bowie's attractive but unmuscular voice.

It was the sound of a thousand two-inch television speakers, and in the space of half an hour we thereby lost his accounts of "Heroes", "Golden Years", "Let's Dance". Years", "Let's Dance",
"Fashion" and others. Only

Thereafter the first half grew increasing flashy and frantic, real A Star is Reborn stuff, depending as much on the batteries of swivelling spotlights, beaming berserk policadots around the hall in garish Fifties colours, as on anything issuing from the loudspeakers.

The interval was prefaced by a truly dreadful version of the Velvet Underground's "White Light, White Heat", a superfluous show-band saxophone arrangement adding a flabby belly to what was once a song of desperation.

The quality of Bowie's imagination and the importance of his influence cannot be doubted, but one of the problems of his concerts is that his songs are completed structures, not susceptible to spon-taneous variation. Theatre is the answer, and the distraction: there were many dramatic tricks varied dynamics and to Bowie's and stunts in the second half, classy crooning against the some enjoyable. Judged purely chorus of the Simms brothers, on the projection of his on the projection of his presence, Bowie was deeply impressive: he is helped, of course, by his natural grace and by a face constructed for the spotlight. As rock and roll, it was less thrilling little tension or sense of danger, and an almost overbearing cheerfulness from the central character. What one would expect, perhaps, from a man who is reportedly hand-fed portions of sashimi before he takes the

We sat at a white table with legs like a space probe. The chairs were white, the walls were white. A pervasive hush somehow gave the impression of hidden technology smoothly at work.

This was the office of Norman Foster, winner of this year's Royal Institute of British Architects gold medal. Except for a number of architectural models, including one for a Renault warehouse near Swindon just returned from Renault's head office in Paris, the room was almost bare. There was nothing on the table except a sketchbook that Foster, who wore an open-necked shirt and a lemon-coloured Ralph Lauren sweater, had brought with him. On the wall was a photograph of the space module from which the aesthetic of the table, designed by Foster Associates, was in part derived.

He had not been able to meet me at his home, because it was being rebuilt. (Plans exhibited at the Heinz Gallery a little while ago show that it will be a conjuror's palace of sophisticated gadgetry, flexible to meet the expanding demands of new children or new clectronics.) But when I had gone through the automatically opening doors into the office and braved the cool-looking receptionist, he said that this was also in a state of flux. He apologised for the mess. It was some time before I realised what he meant. Although I did see parts of a full scale mock-up of a section of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank piled discreetly in a corner, the usual rubbish of office life abandoned coffee cups - was conspicuous by its absence.

Foster's brand of High Tech - the style of which he and his former partner, Richard Rogers, are the two made, temporary one." leading exponents in Britain - does not It is even possible to take kindly to clutter. In contrast to the spaghetti of exposed working parts that festoons Rogers's work, Foster's buildings are sleekly regular - coolly, even coldly Classic. There is an element of fun, as in the banks of escalators providing a spectacle of perpetuum mobile for the workforce at the heart of the Willis Faber headquarters, Ipswich: but the escalators lie inside a smooth wall of reflecting glass, slinking around the edges of the 2.4 acre site. Foster lists his hobbies as running and flying aircraft; objects are not allowed to pile up around him.

"No other architect", the RIBA citation pronounces, "has so effec-tively drawn the advanced modern technology of the aerospace and electronic worlds into architecture." The Sainsbury Centre in Norwich, a silver arts-hanger of such wizardry as to outshine the objects it contains, is clad in superplastic aluminium panels, a revolutionary material for the building trade. One takes for granted the performance of certain things outside the building context. One does not expect one's car to leak - or if it does, it is a major event. But a lot of roofing materials do not come with any guarantee." Yet Foster feels that the technology of his buildings has been overstressed:

Building are about people and for people." It is a truism, but one that he likes to emphasize. "We are concerned with what makes a building a good place to be. As well as all the technology, the Ipswich building has the natural qualities of sunlight coming down into the core, and roof gardens for the work force."

Will it be a more human, less twenty-first century Norman Foster who mounts the rostrum to receive the gold medal on June 21?

He takes satisfaction in working with small workshops – "almost the local blacksmith" – in many of the processes for his buildings. Surprisingly little of his industrial-style furniture is, in fact, ready made. The table at the latest and the latest which we were sitting was a case in point, having been produced specially, although made by an industrial sub-contractor rather than a furniture

"Through an understanding of the industrial process and the materials, we are able to harness industry almost on a cottage basis, with quite small production runs," he says. This is both better and cheaper than taking the off-the-peg product. "Most of the things which appear in catalogues only give the illusion of being ready made. In reality, when you order something, they then roll up their sleeves and make it for you. So if you say, 'I will have x thousand metres of your ceiling, they don't actually open the door, run into the cupboard and pull it out; they put in motion an industrial

It is even possible to detect an Artsand-Crafts note in the new Foster. "Around us are things that in a way are hand-crafted, although hand crafting is something usually associated with scrubbed-pine furniture and health food restaurants." The office has recently been holding "fruitful conver-sations" with John Makepeace, the traditional cabinet maker.

Foster is a fluent talker. And when he talks, he draws - "as long as I can remember I have always been drawing". To clients probably more familiar with the written word or the printed column of figures, it must be persuasive. These skills are vital in the 1980s: the phrase "back to the drawing board" is now obsolete and should be replaced with "back to the interview, the lunch or the meeting", because it is in these discussions that the design is con-

When I saw him, Foster had just returned from a weekend at an hotel in Arundel spent "brainstorming" with the heads of BBC radio to decide what kind of building was needed for the Langham site. Foster sees it as a semipublic, semi-private building like the Galleria in Milan or, intriguingly, the Lancaster and Barton Arcades in Manchester, his home town.

Public relations are now such a major part of architecture that Foster regards the Fred Olsen Centre in the Port of London, built in the 1960s, as a key building in his career. "In that project we were not only involved with the upper echelons of management, but with local management, such as the docks manager, who subsequently has become a director of Olsen's but at that time was very much the manager who would settle some disputes literally with fisticuffs - I'm not suggesting that was an on-going style of management -and, vitally, with the unions."

He is proud that, when the building opened, it was the union representative who defended the use of one-way mirrors, feared by some as a management tool for spying, on the grounds that it saved heat and did away with the need for curtains, allowing workers unimpaired views through the win-

At 47, in terms of the architectural profession, with its long training and few prestige commissions, Foster is young. Last year the gold medal went to the long-retired Berthold Lubetkin, aged 81. Foster's early success is all the more remarkable since he did not enter an architect's office antil he was 20. an architect's office until he was 20, which was "rather late in the day".

On leaving school after O levels, he went into the City Treasurer's department of Manchester Council. Then came National Service. "I did electronics in the Air Force. I came into an After Manchester, Foster won a architect's office on the contract Henry scholarship to Yale, where he management side, by virtue of my accounting and financial background of sorts." There it dawned on him that he could be an architect - an aspiration that had seemed beyond reach. "So I decided to confront the guy who ranthe practice and say, 'Look, it is my intention, if I can do it, to study architecture'. He said: 'How the hell can you get into a school of architecture if you left school at 16 and haven't got any work to show? I said I had been doing work in the evenings. I brought it in, and there and then he gave me a house to design.

He worked his way through Manchester University (having left school early, he could not get a grant) by winning prizes and doing architectural perspectives. "I was brought up in an architectural school with a very strong emphasis on things like the historical orders and measured drawing - those kinds of technical skills. It was the tailend of that.

"By the same token I think it was at the tail-end of a tradition of architectplanners, where much more recently architects and planners have been trained separately. A lot of planners think overly in two dimensions and think overly in political terms, rather than just of the wider scale end, as it were, of an architectural process.

Two-way mirror: the Willis Faber building by day and night met Rogers. He spent several years in the United States working as a city and university planner, and on his return to England collaborated for a time with the American futurist guru, Buckminster Fuller. Can the influence of Manchester still be seen on his work? Foster is notoriously meticulous about detailing, supposedly choosing every last screwhead in his buildings himself. Planning is also something he stresses.

"The site is a prime generator of the building. For Willis Faber, the decision to do a low building, which would follow and hug and recreate that kind of random street pattern of a medieval market town rather than impose on it a kind of alien so-called 'modern' geometry of right angles, that very organic response to that street pattern, takes stock of the typical spaces of a market town in a northern latitude. It's not a piazza. A lot of attempts to create piazzas in England have been doomed, because there are already enough open wind-swept spaces."

Without prompting, Foster volun-teers an article of faith: "I suppose we regard the fix of time and cost as something really quite sacred. For 20-odd years we have been rigidly under budget, under time."

How confident is he about the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank headquarters in Hongkong labelled, mis-leadingly, the Most Expensive Office Block in the World by The Sunday Times and others? Press reports say it could massively exceed the estimate, reaching what has been projected as a final cost of £600m.

Foster laughs this away as "misinformation". Receiving the high-prestige American Reynolds Award twice or, as a foreigner, winning the competition to build a national athletics stadium in Germany seem events that might have been reported more widely, but were not. Bad news is news. On Hongkong: "At this stage it is a minimal percentage over. There is still between 20 and 30 per cent of that contract to be sublet. The essence of cost planning is not that you are going to get every element spot on target, but that some are going to be under and some are going to be over. At the end of the day – ideally – the books balance." One thing is certain: with its stepped-back profile and hanging gardens, the building has already haffled architectural critics who have baffled architectural critics, who have referred to Babylonian and Gothic, early Chinese and Expressionist styles in their attempts to decode it.

His next projects include a lowenergy house developed with Buckmimister Fuller and a "low-profile" building "more than normally discreet", for London's proposed Third Airport at Stanstead. All Foster's media skills will be needed for that

At 33, producer Jeremy Thomas is something of a phenomenon. Over the past seven years he has produced six movies. seven years he has produced six movies, including Jerzy Skolimowski's The Shour, which won the Best Film Award at Cannes in 1977. This year he is responsible for two films: Eureka, directed by Nicolas Roeg and starring Gene Hackman, and Merry Christmas Mr Lawrence, an extraordinary Anglo-Japanese project directed by Nagus Oshima and starring David Bowie as a British prisoner of war. The confidence behind such a confession may have something to do with the fact that he is a movie child. His father (Ralph) that he is a movie child. His father (Ralph) and his uncle (Gerald) were both film directors in the heyday of the regular British film industry. He grew up "in Hollywood-in-England. Bucks, surrounded by film people, with Dirk Bogarde coming round for lunch and all that." He began his professional career at the film labs in Denham, working his way through the ranks to become a film editor and then, almost by accident, the producer of an Australian picture called Mad Dog, which was directed by a friend. "We somehow raised the money, though I was totally green. Dennis Hopper from Easy Rider had been cast. We went out to Tahos, New been cast. We went out to Tahos, New Mexico, to meet him and this character Mexico, to meet him and this character came to the airport in a jeep with the stetson hat, and shark's teeth round his neck, and there, reincarnated, was my childhood hero. But the picture was a nightmare to make."

The word "chaos" features frequently in Jeremy Thomas's conversation, and the walls of his tiny office in Soho testify to the more bizarre moments of his career. Pinged up are several snaps of the Sex Pinned up are several snaps of the Sex Pistols - the legacy of three years work nurturing the film which eventually came out as The Great Rock in Roll Swindle in 1980. "I was offered it partly because no one else would take it on, in 1978, when it was all happening." Film school student Julien Temple had shot some footage; then Russ Meyer, humourist and American porn director, came in on the project. The group's manager and svengali, Malcolm McLaren, was heavily involved. So, at one stage, was theatre and film impresario Michael White. "It was this and then that. Headlines in the papers. Chaos. Largely due to the anarchy prevailing at the time.

Thomas's Japanese project, based on a novel by Laurens Van der Post and to be sis films so far - from independent sources. In this case that means a group of Japanese investors, including the film's director, a British bank, and a New Zealand tax shelter deal. Their contributions add up to $5m, which is what the movie cost to shoot on location in the Cook Islands, in the South Pacific.

Thomas acknowledges that this sort of project sets him apart from his peers. They probably don't understand why I make films like this, because they are more difficult to do. But they're all visibly well-crafted, films of quality and long life, mounted for a good price. So I think I'll go on being able to make films even without an out-and-out hit."

Merry Christmas Mr Lawrence falls within an area that Thomas now recognises as his own: "Bringing together very varied cultural influences." Thomas and Oshima are already planning another film, set in Paris this time. Meanwhile he and Roeg are to make a film from Terry Johnson's Royal Court play, Insignificance, and Thomas is going to produce a project based on Colin Maclanes' story of teenage and adulthood in the 1950s. Absolute Beginners, to be directed by Julien Temple.

Before he slipped into editing, and then across into producing. Thomas had intended to be a director, following in the family path. But, he says, "you need a tremendous amount of bravery. Directing is not only a question of technique, It's something else." But will he take the plunge? "I'm trying."

And what does he feel about the producer's role? "I enjoy it. Even if I direct, I want to continue producing I conti

I want to continue producing. I can't really understand producers putting themselves up as heroes, though. Film is either a group thing, a family thing. Or it's a director's film. It is not, as such, a producer's medium."

Why Madam is a winner on points

"I must warn you, I'm useless to interview. I'm horribly discreet." To kick off with such a revealing remark was an encouragement. For Dame Ninette de Valois meant to indicate that she would not be drawn into talking about people, either to praise or to blame, that she abhors the fashion for revelatory biography which spotlights all the blemishes one has striven hard to looser language have lowered their voices and sweetened their tongues conceal; that she detests gossip and at her approach. Her moral influence, no less than her cultural

But she said more than she meant to say; it is typical of her to assume that I should hardly want to talk about herself. Modesty of this order is rare indeed, and at first sight astonishing in a woman who has helped shape the cultural history of England in the twentieth century. Yet it is in keeping with her character; all her achievements have been for the Royal Ballet, not for herself. She has been ruthless (and wise) in her pursuit of glory and excellence for her character, totally excellence for her dancers, totally indifferent to whether she should receive the credit for having done so. Ninette de Valois has pride; she has no vanity. When the Bolshoi Ballet were on visit to London, they were perpleted to see Dame Ninette in the self-service canteen beneath the Opera House lining up with her tray behind at least twenty others, including employ stress hands and including grubby stage-hands and sweaty cygnets, Maris Liepa, one of the few who spoke English, voiced their bewilderment. "Why is she

Because she wants some shepberd's pie." The answer did not satisfy. The Russians, who are used to having one eating place for principal dancers, another for corps de ballet, another for workmen, thought that their supposed classlessness was being gently satirized by this odd demonstration. They simply could not understand that the founder and creator of the Royal Ballet should receive no special treatment, still less that she should Nevertheless, people do subtly adapt their behaviour in her presence, in acknowledgement of her authority. achievements, has been enormous; This is not to say that Madam is austere. She has a beguiling sense of fun and enjoys a giggle, throwing her head back to savour the humour. She is an easy, relaxing convergationalist, except when a point of principle is at stake, when she will present arguments cogenity and forcefully, hugging the last word. When I suggested that audiences at Covent Garden sometimes dressed shabbily, she was quick to put me right. "Before the war, audiences in England were always overdressed. There was consternation when Thomas Beecham dared to appear in shirt-sleeves at a rehearsall But in the great opera houses of Europe it was never the fashion to dress up. After all, a state theatre should belong to the people, shouldn't it?" Tradition is the deepest value which Madam cherishes, fittingly for someone who has invented a tradition in English dancing. She is herself the product of several traditions. Born in County Wicklow, Ireland, 85 years ago, in a well-to-do Anglo-Irish family teetering on the edge of impoverishment, she inherited a Victorian sense of discipline tempered by gentle Irish whimsy, There is also some Scottish thrift in her blood (her great-grand-mother wrote the famous Memoirs of a Highland Lady), and some French aristocratic bearing. She is descended from both the Montmorencys and a branch of the de Valois family, from whom she took her professional name. Her real name is Edris Stannis, 'Edris' being taken from a character in Marie Corelli's novel Ardoth - Edicis is not so much sweet woman as most perfect angel! A dream of Heaven made

As a girl, she began her pro-fessional career in the bosom of another tradition, that of the music hall (she appeared with George Robey), and performed "fancy daucing" on the end of Brighton Pier. When she graduated to ballet, she was taught in the oldest school, the French, then took lessons from the French, then took lessons from Cocchiti, the great Italian teacher, and joined Diaghiley's company for two years, absorbing the Russian many traditional echoes informing her intellingence, she should be an establisher rather than an innovator. It was an accident of medical history which compelled Ninette de Valois to give up dancing at the age of 25. Having suffered persistent pain in her left side, which she had attributed to be normal agonies of a dancer's life (andiences would be surprised if they knew how much routine pain dancers tolerate every day), she at length discovered that had been stricken for years with polio. "I wasn't sorry to give up; it hurt too much." A lesser woman would have disappeared from the records, but her brave spirit could not envisage inactivity. There was at that time no balletic tradition in England: Bold and stubborn; she determined to start one, drawing on her deep conviction that the time was right. In 1931 she founded her Academy of Choreographic Art with just six students (this eventually grew into the Royal Ballet School now one of the finest in the world and the cradle of an immediately identifiable English style), and in the same year, her little group of dancers. Of necessity, she became a choreographer, creating 17 of the company's first 22 ballets, and an administrator with guts and genius in equal measure. She persuaded Lilian Baylis to give her a theatre (Sadler's Wells), she enticed Frederick Ashton away from the other fledgling group founded by Marie Rambert, and she signed on as musical director the marvellous Constant Lambert. From such tiny beginnings grew the Royal Ballet which has since given the world scores of brilliant dancers, and half a dozen of international and historic

In retrospect, Madam cherishes the greatest moment in 1946, when the company gave its first performance at the Opera House, Covent Garden . "To open our own opera house after the war was very important. It meant we had a home." And not any old home. either, but the correct and fitting one. Sol Hurok, the American impresario, begged Madam to take her company to New York, where he had a small theatre ready for them. But she resisted. "I felt that we should not make the right impact in anything less than the Metropolitan Opera House, and we should do better to wait." An English ballet company in a Broadway theatre in 1947 would have aroused some interest; at the Met in 1949 it created a sensation, providing one of the most historic occasions in the theatrical history of New York.

How did Ninette de Valois do it?

First of all, she has consistently been concerned with the future, "You cannot expect dancers to take the long view. They don't always know what is best for them." And she believes in the virtues of discipline. Generations of dancers have been terrified of displeasing her, aninhibition which makes for powerful concentration. Did she think she was a disciplinarian? "Well, so many people must have told you that I am, so there is no point in denying it, is there? It shows in the way she creates her ballets, which are thoroughly worked out in her own mind before she takes them to the dancers, imposing her pattern on their talents. It shows also in her desire not to allow dancers to perform as often as they might wish.

Creative work suffers from too much trundling around, and our company was never at its best after a gruelling tour."

Her abhorrence of complacency leads her continually to question standards, never to be satisfied. always to exhort greater effort, a habit which some have found irritating and undermining.

Her energy shows no sign of abating. She still takes a great interest in the school and is elighted at their recent success with English country dances, which she has been recommending for years. She is frequently to be seen at the Opera House, which suggests to some colleagues that she is reluctant to lose control, a view which she would heartily contest. But it is true she does like to be consulted on all important decisions, and will not yield to other opinions without a light Deference is not grudgingly paid to a woman who might be harsh in debate, but who has proven so often to be fired by vision and sustained by experience. The paradoxical responses she evokes were summed up by one who said: "She is wilful, arbitrary, inspired".

Dame Ninette lives in a groundfloor flat opposite the river in Barnes, with her charming doctor husband, Arthur Connell, whom she married nearly 50 year ago, who is the only person in the world to call her Edris. The flat is full of sensible chairs with straight, hard backs and furniture by no means ostentations. A handsome, plain Edwardian wall-clock ticks loudly. Madam is clearly not a hoarder, hardly anything here gives away the identity of the inhabitants nor is there anything superfluous; it is said she begrudges every penny, especially those spent Until very recently the Connells lived in a little house along the road. But they had to leave it whenthe stairs became too much for Dame Ninette. I realized, with a shock, that she had been in pain eith arthritis throughout two hours we had been together, she wears a plastic collar covered by a scarf, which one tends not to notice. When I went to shake her hand, on departure, she withdrew it as if she had touched a hot iron. Yet she never once complained.

She shops in Barnes High Street ("complete strangers seem to know me, Isn't it amazing? That's what television does") and does her own cooking. Her greatest pleasure now is reading the classics, and her most useful piece of furniture the bookcase, stuffed with Shakespeare, Tolstoy, Trollope, George Eliot, Hardy, and her great favourite, Jane Austen. "There would be nothing worse than not being able to read", she says.

"You should read the classics once every five years, and discover them each time with a fresh eye. I recently returned to Milton. Marvellous!"She also enjoys writing, and had some of her poems read at the Shakespeare Institute in Stratford. Yet she has never kept a diary; that would be 'indiscreet'. One can see why Natalia Makarova once said: If Madam were a man I would have married her. She makes me think".

Of course, Dame Ninette is such a public figure that celebrations of her achievements and stirling character are frequent. It is still something of an ordeal for her to appear on stage and receive adulation, for she is at heart a shy woman. "I have never felt comfortable taking a curtain call: Fred Ashton had to tell me not to hold the flowers upside down like an umbrella. I still try to remember that

All in the family

The surfeit of Greenes at the Bodley Head is swelling to alarming proportions. Having just published a book of conversations with the novelist and announced a biography novelist and announced a biography of the former BBC director-general, it now plans a history of the family brewery. Greene King. The founding father. Benjamin Greene, had four sons, of whom one became Governor of the Bank of England, the second ran the brewery and entered Parliament, while the third, something of a black sheep, sired 13 children before dying, presumably breathless, at the age of 19. It was the youngest son, described in the book as "a strange melancholy misfit," who became the ancestor of the literary dynasty that embraces the literary dynasty that embraces Graham C. Greene, joint chairman of the Bodley Head's holding company, Sir Hugh, now president of the publishing house, and Graham, the company's best-selling author.

What was the most famous statement ever addressed to Parliament? I ask the question again since Clive Bradley, chief executive of the Publishers' Association, referred in this column to the second most famous, that by Milton on good books as the life blood of the master spirit. Bradley is particularly attached to that one as he is angered by the Government's "appalling" spending cuts for school and university book provision. I am open to suggestion, but I would say, with Bradley, that the most famous was made by Cromwell at the dismissal of the Rump Parliament in 1653: "Take away that fool's bauble, the ruace." In that same speech Cromwell told the members: "You have sat too long here, for any good you have been doing," which is also a sentiment Bradley would seem to endorse vis a vis Margaret seem to endorse vis a vis Margaret Thatcher.

I hear Central Office is warning Mrs Thatcher that she faces competition for publicity today: Shirley Maclaine is holding a press confer-cace in Dallas to launch her book Out on a Limb, and is likely to be questioned closely about the identity of her Labour MP lover in the late 1970s.

Another strong contender in my competition to spot the most unfulfillable election promise. Reasonably enough, many are awaiting late developments before committing themselves to a figure in my competition to predict the national swing between Labour and Conservative at the general election The generous prize is a whole case of Johnnie Walker's de luxe Swing whisky. The thickening files of entries show a surprisingly large number who, in defiance of all the opinion polls, predict a swing to Labour, and one or two who expect a swing to the Tories that would outdo the most volatile by-election results! Guesses, to three places of decimals and in writing please, to reach me by polling day at the latest.

It is high time to explain that the Denver Shoe is a misnomer for the nasty contraption now in London's streets. What we have here is the British-made Wheelok P, a two-choc device which clamps either side of the wheel, and the Bulldog II T, a calliper model, for larger vehicles. We are using the Denver tag only because a similar clamp has been in use there since 1955. In view of the GLC's tireless campaign to intromore fitting name would be the South Bank Shoe.

I never thought I would hear Ken Russell say these words: "Films are a dead medium. It is a false world and I am sick of it." The one-time crifant terrible of TV documentaries, back in Britain after a spell in South Carolina directing Madama Butterfly for the bemused organizers of a local arts festival, tells me he now leads a gypsy existence; he wanders the globe directing operas, a medium which is "fresh, exciting and invigorating". He assures me he is broke, but that he doesn't mind, and that it would take "an amazing offer" to lure him back to the studios. "In opera you don't get double crossed at the end by a Hollywood executive . . . they are not film makers, they are bankers."

At its Albert Hali jamboree week Women's Institute found itself debating a motion calling for legal controls on experiments with test tube fertilization. An amendment was proposed seeking to specify that it referred only to homan and part-human" embryos. When bewildered delegates asked what this could possibly mean, the platform explained that a new technique for testing male fertility involved the introduction of sperm to a specially prepared hamster's ovum." The resulting hybrid can at present survive only long enough to bring hope to its father, but the ethical and theological implications are clearly profound.

class do not play the part there that they do in Britain. But Unionist politics had and have a class aspect which has recently changed in a most important though little-noticed way, a change which is a conse-quence of the troubles and a complication of them. The upper classes who used to lead the Unionist cause have left it. Orange politics have been proletarianized.

At the time of partition the leadership of the newly "devolved" return home and an increasing prospect of being ambushed. Last month alone, Israeli troops in Lebanon were attacked 60 times.

Scarcely a day passes without the military command updating casualty figures. These have included an unusually large proportion of sol-diers suffering from mental dis-orders because of the nature of the orders because of the nature of the war and lack of support for its aims. At the last count, 494 Israelis had been killed since the invasion, 149 of them since the initial fighting died down last August. A further 2,760 have been wounded, 375 of those since September 1, figures which include those lost in the explosion which destroyed the Two williams.

Yitzhak Rabin, the former Labour rine minister, has coined the Yiddish word plonter (roughly translated as "Gordian Knot") to describe Israel's unhappy position in Lebanon. There is no more telling reminder of it than to go on one of the few, heavily-guarded trips which the army arranges for journalists to front-line positions. Some of these are so close to the Syrians that Israeli soldiers occasionally serenade the enemy with strangulated versions of Arabic pop songs.

There is little sign of the brave face which ministers still put on the continuing arrange in I shance es, the army has designed a new troop-carrier in which soldiers travel back to back, with open flaps all round. These menacing vehicles bristling with cocked automatic weapons are gradually replacing the troop-carrying buses.

General Sharon claimed last week that he had always envisaged a partial pullback of troops to a more managemble line after the line after the manageable line after the winter. Although such a move out of the perilous Shouf Mountains would virtually partition Lebanon, it is being pressed for vigorously by many senior officers. Most I met in Lebanon expected it within a matter of weeks.

Overshadowing any such retreat to a 28-mile line parallel with the Al-

Awali river is the threat of a new war with Syria. Such a conflict was hovering inexorably in the wings during the recent signing of the Israel-Lebanon pact, just as the prospect of a new war in Lebanon hannied the final Israeli pull-out from Sinai in April 1982.

Neither the war-weary Israeli

Neither the war-weary Israeli public nor the politically vulnerable Begin coalition appears anxious for such a conflict, but among both there is an assessment that given present circumstances in Lebanon, combined with the stubborn attitude of the Soviet-backed Syrian regime, it may soon become inevitable. A senior Defence Ministry official explained: "Israel does not want confrontation but we can offer no guarantee that limited clashes will remain limited. In fact, we can guarantee the opposite."

EEC: figuring out the facts

Monday, June 6 - the Stuttgart summit day that never was. This day Mrs Thatcher was to have queened it on the European. stage, showing that international "leader-" ship" which she modestly tells us has been forced upon her, and bringing our "own money" back by getting a massive rebate on our contribution to the Euro-budget. Ever since she told our Euro partners that she could not make it, the Conservatives (and the Alliance for that matter) have been lying low about the alleged benefits of our EEC membership and their policies for the future of the Community if we stay in.

Instead, the Conservatives have come up with a negative — the "2,500,000 jobs at risk" if we pull out. Anyone can play the statistic scare game, and many pro-Marketeers do. There was, of course, the warning by the European Movement during the 1975 referendum cam-paign that if Britain came out, paign that if Britain came out, unemployment would rise to three million (it was then 831,000 under a Labour government). Britain voted to stay in, and unemployment has risen to 3,330,000.

Recently the British members of the European Commission, Ivor Richard and Christopher Tugendhat—whose jobs depend on our staying in — have said that witidrawal would mean five million out of work. They give no indication of how they arrive at this figure, which does not even tally with the Tory one. But at election time any figure will do for propaganda purposes.

one, that at election time any lighter will do for propaganda purposes.

So let us try to establish the truth. Five and a half million people are employed in British manufacturing industry, and only one-twelfth of their products go to EEC countries, so even if all their exports to Europe stopped dead, we would be talking about 458,000 jobs. Double that for the other and the are still the other and the are still the other and the are still the other and the o knock-on effects and we are still below one million.

Ah, the Tories retort, West Germany is our biggest single export market. Maybe, but also one of our least profitable. In the 12 months to August 1982 our visible trade with Germany was £1,396 in the red, a deficit exceeded only in our trade. deficit exceeded only in our trade with Japan. (Hansard 18,11,82, col countries which largely accounted for our overall £2,256m deficit. The truth is that even the most ardent pro-Marketeers have been bitterly disappointed with the economic results of our member-ship. Nor have the other promised advantages materialized. Agricul-tural spending still takes the lion's share of the Euro-budget (about two-thirds). After last year's excessive farm price increase, food surpluses have shot up again to astronomic heights. Britain is still the second largest net contributor, though we have the third weakest economy. The outlook for the 1984 Eurobudget is menacing. Even allowing for a British rebate which gives us less than half of our "own money" back, spending will go through the ceiling of 1 per cent VAT. The only way the budget can be balanced, where more money is raised from unless more money is raised from member countries, is by trimming the already derisory allocations for the anti-unemployment policy.

As The Economist put it on May 7: "The EEC will go broke next year unless some lucky fluke occurs." It added: "If Mrs Thatcher thinks she can achieve a triumph at Stuttgart to help launch a June election cam-paign, she may be in for a nasty shock." That is why she decided not

Ferret-free, at Labour's peril

It was obvious something had become disjointed in the framework of the universe when my usually mild-mannered stepfather threatened to break the neck of the village vicar. "It's not 1984 you know, not yet," my enraged parent shouted as the man of the cloth tried to hide behind the bus stop. A raw nerve in the body politic of South Yorkshire first hand the unconsidered, yet crucial, ferret factor of this election. The vicar, known in the village to be a Labour supporter with CND sympathics, had established a nature reserve in his churchyard, in the middle of an area with one of the largest rat populations in the country. Since before Gooff Boycott, old men used to take their ferrets, whippets and terriers to murder the odd rat and catch a few rabbits.

lay exposed - I had experienced at

From the best possible motives the vicar decided to declare the churchyard a ferret-free zone, banning dogs and anything else which threatened the armies of wildlife around the graves.

My stepfather was ordered out with the family bull terrier, even though it was pointed out that, as there were no bulls grazing among the plaster angels, the dog could not be regarded as a threat. Suddenly, in an area with the type of unemployment problems beyond the wildest dreams of southern social workers, ferrets have become a symbol of

This explanation of the threat to the cleric flowed out in the usually silent lunchtime game of dominoes. "It's one of the last pleasures we have left to go out with a ferret or a whippet. It's not cruel, either. Why don't the Labour Party ask folk like us before writing their manifesto?"
my Uncle Albert said. Many agree with him.

A meeting of more than 100 trade unionists at the Huddersfield Friendly and Trades Club unanimously passed a resolution promising to fight any party dragging "hunting, shooting, fishing, ferreting, falconry and any field sport" into politics. This is despite the fact that Mr Michael Foot has criticized "the organized savagery of blood sports," and promises to ban all hunting with dogs should he be clected. It is not known where Foot's tures might never glare, Tebbit-like, own dog Dizzy stands on the issue, at a rabbit again. They would mope though he is believed to be the scourge of squirrels on Hampstead at being denied the right to work.

Proposing the Huddersfield resolution, Mr George Woodrow, a member of the engineering workers' union said: "The Labour party platform is going to be on jobs and I am all for this, but thousands of jobs are tied up with field sports." He then went on to describe the "well meaning people in the anti-blood occasion.

Scargill, the Mother Superior of Yorkshire working class politics who moved his headquarters north to be back among his "own people."

When asked about his position on the weekend pastimes of his members he said: "The NUM is and always has been opposed to the barbaric blood sports, including fox hunting. Our members are fully in support of our policy." My mother could not believe that the holy one had said such a thing: "I thought he was against the rich who try to keep people off private land. A lot of men go ferreting to help feed their families."

Ferrets, it was agreed, should certainly be an issue at the next Labour Party conference. "We are always having trendy ideas foisted on us," a man with a whippet said. After this election they might take a bit more notice of the actual voter." When I rang Labour Party headquarters the policy on ferrets seemed to be confused. "I think people have been saying conflicting things and we will be having a rethink," a spokesman said. But it will probably be too late for this election. "We have had quite a number of people saying they want to stop their political levy," the British Field Sports Society said, Mr. Brian, Toon of the Marters of Brian Toon of the Masters' of Foxhounds Association added: "Opposition among trade unionists to the Labour Party's proposed ban is videspread."

Ferrets have often done stalwart national service. An army of ferrets was used by a conservation group to rid Stonehenge in Wiltshire of a plague of rabbits threatening to undermine the foundations.

A ferret solved the problem of filming the royal wedding for one television company. A draw string in a conduit used for a vital cable had broken, but a ferret, tempted by a juicy piece of bacon, shot through the pipe attached to a nylon line. A lot of Birmingham's telephone lines were laid in the same way, though in those days they used live rats as the

This is probably why champion ferret legger Reg Mellor has now abandoned keeping the very sharp-toothed beauty down to very sharptoothed beasts down his trousers. which the vast and unlovely face of Stormont had not yet been built - out of a sense of noblesse oblige. The austere Dublin lawyer Carson was followed as Ulster's leader by a succession of military gentlemen. They expressed the national sentimoderated it. The line ran out with Terence O'Neill and James Chichester-Clark (as they then were; both Eton and Irish Guards) who could no longer control Northern Ireland, not just the violence on the Catholic side but the Protestant also. That fact was tacitly recognized with the proroguing of Stormont in 1972. Brian Faulkner came and went, the great Protestant strike put paid to a first attempt at power sharing. The old Unionist party began to break up. Its traditional leaders departed, some to form the wellintentioned, non-sectarian Alliance party, some quitting politics for good and no doubt gratefully. The lightning conductor had gone and the Protestant masses found new leaders, their own kind.

It is hard to exaggerate the importance of this development for Ulster. The old Unionist leaders disliked Irish nationalism and wanted to keep the link with England. But like Wintour they kept up the rhetoric of Ulster unionis largely for form's sake, or for the sake of the servants and the employees, and of course their electors. They did not instinctively share the visceral separatist nationalism of the Presbetarian smallholder in County Down or County Tyrone; still less of the Belfast shipworker. They were Irish gentlemen, with friends and family on both sides of the border.

that for some sporting purposes the United Kingdom, including Northern Ireland, and the Irish Republic are separate entities: they send two teams to the Olympics, for example. In soccer the British Isles produce five international teams, including one from each part of Ireland. But in rugby football the whole island, 32 counties, is represented as ever by one team. (At this moment the British Lions are touring New Zealand led by two Irishmen, a northern Protestant as manager, a southern Catholic as captain).

how is it that 60 years after partition, with all the bitterness and violence, there should still be a happy, all-Ireland rugby team? "That's simple. Rugger's a middle-class game. It's the working class that's the problem — and their game's soccer. If all of Ireland was middle-class the island would be united tomorrow."

there are people in Belfast who know what he meant, who would agree all too vehemently. The brooding half-conscious sense of incipient betrayal there comes from a belief that the Orange Ulsterman is not understood across the water. The belief is right. A persistent myth among green Irishmen holds that the Ulster connexion is artificially maintained because the English love their fellow Protestants so much. Little could be further from the truth. The English have always had a soft spot for the Irish - the southern Catholics, the lovable if rascally Irishman. This might be called the Flurry Knox What this means for the state of syndrome. It is the Orangemen we icuously no longer is. The Official Unionists of Mr Molyneaux and Mr Enoch Powell are now a thorough-going plebeian party. Paradoxically they are even further from the comprehension of English politicians than the more radically populist Democratic Unionists. The Officials, at least in theory, want to express their Orange patriotism A British journalist - Welsh to be through a further binding of the ties precise - asked an Irish colleague, with Britain. Mr Paisley represents how is it that 60 years after what Mr Powell devisively calls "Protestant Sinn Fein" and in that way is more easily understood by Westminster and Whitehall: just another nationalist politician, like Michael Collins or Makarios or Mr

Mugabe.

This great change of Unionist politics is pregnant with future. In the old days the rough Orangemen believed that England and the English – and Anglo-Irish – ruling class would stand by him. There is an Orange song, "The Murder of McBriar" in which the Catholics who have killed an innocent old Protestant are warned of the revenge that will be taken when we come marching "with nobles at our head". The nobles have gone. Now the Protestant workers of Ulster are on their own, farther away from England - and farther from Dr Garret FitzGerald's "peacefully united Ireland" than ever.

> The balance of the Sunday Mirror's campaign coverage has been helped considerably by the enlistment of Roy Hattersley as a guest columnist for the duration of the election, putting the opposite point of view to the paper's resident, pro-Thatcher columnist Woodrow Wyatt, always provocative and readable but a liability at election times for a left-wing newspaper. Mr Wyatt's column yesterday carried the journalistic equivalent of a government health warning. "Un-like the Tory papers, the Sunday readers are probably bored to death by the election, the Sunday Mirror thought up an ingenious way to put over its message. It devised on its centre pages a general election quiz consisting of 24 statements which the reader had to tick as being either true or false. (Sample: Output per worker in manufacturing is now only 5 per cent higher than when the Tories came to power. In the previous four years under Labour it was up by more than 14 per cent). It's reassuring to know that at least one Fleet Street paper has been able to show Saatchis the way home in clever propaganda.

Once again another Norman Mailer essay on the election published in the Mail on Sunday numed out to be a damp squib, his description of himself throughout as "our poor American" conflicting with reports of the fee he is receiving. One phrase he used yesterday to describe the Prime Minister - "she hovered on vertiginous heights of aplomb" - will consign him directly to Pseud's Corner, I fear. I preferred the Sunday People's account of Mrs. Thatcher shouting "out of fire-tration" at Denis, which was altogether more human

Both Mrs Thatcher and Mr Foot had two articles published in yesterday's papers. While the Prime Minister's pieces in the News of the World and the Sunday Express appeared to have been written by the same person, not necessarily Mrs. Thatcher, The Observer's Michael Foot had a markedly different style to the News of the World's Michael Foot. Only the News of the World markedly a platform for Row provided a platform for Roy Jenkins. No Sunday paper has been willing to throw its weight behind the Alliance, The Observer having lost its nerve at the last minute after flirting with the idea for several weeks. It will be interesting to see whether The Guardian can bring itself this week to see the Alliance as anything more than a Tactical vote, or whether it, too, will sit on the

THE LOVE THAT LABOUR LOST

By the closing weekend of the the inflationary consequences of election the two opposition parties seem largely to have out unemployment. thrown away their manifestos in favour of a single slogan: "Stop Thatcher". That is also the message of that part of the daily and weekly press which supports either Labour or the Alliance. The Tory and Alliance campaigns will be reviewed in these columns in turn tomorrow and on Wednesday. What is it today which can explain why the Labour Party enters the last few days of campaigning in such a sorry state, when, by any normal standards, it should have started the campaign with much to commend its position? Indeed during the first week of campaigning it actually started to gain points from the Conservatives

The Labour Party started the election campaign with dry powder. No opposition party could expect a much better target than a government which had to defend three million unemployment, an economy showing only tentative evidence of recovery and a record in which only the conquest of inflation and of the Falklands were measurable successes, with the rest having to be taken on trust from a not very elequent band of ministers. A properly conducted campaign, showing some dent in the Tory position, should have been enough to reduce the danger of enfilade from the Alliance.

Labour's campaigning strategy was to concentrate on unemployment and social issues and to stay off defence, the Faiklands and the Common Market. If that strategy could have been sustained, it might have been effective. Nobody could have imagined how decisively and suicidally it was to be ignored by Labour leaders themselves.

The initial emphasis on unemployment reflected the fact that voters saw it as a major problem. What Labour strategists soon discovered, however, was that the electorate did not automatically assume that Labour had the best solution. Indeed one poll revealed that 27 per cent of the unemployed intended to vote Tory. Morevover there was evidence that electors, particu-

Labour's claim to be able to buy

The strategy for the second week was supposed to emphasize Labour's historic identification with the National Health Service and the whole apparatus of the welfare state. Again the party should have been able to make headway against a government which was felt to be suspect in this area; again it blew its chances in a revealing wrangle over those nuclear disagreements which it had hoped to conceal.

Of course the reasons for this cumulative failure cannot be wholly attributed simply to a maladroit campaign, nor to the inexperience of those party officials in charge of its machine. The causes go back further in time and deeper into the character of the party.

The Labour Party had been living a lie; what is perhaps surprising is that the pressure of a mere three weeks' electioneering has so cruelly exposed the deceit at the core of the party's an election, so much of the party's invective seems to be coded to apply to different wings of itself, rather than to attract the widest measure of support.

socialism can be traced to the illfated decision to lift the ban on dual membership of the Labour Party and sundry sectarian or militant groupings. That decision even condoned fraternal relationships with Communist parties of east Europe. That is when the rot set in which has now disfigured the face of the party. It has allow its activist elements to be taken over by socialists who seem to have no feeling for the millions of Labour voters. The same attitude to their members can be found among activists in the trade unions, who have so much to say in the Labour Party's counsels. There are thus far too many voters who do not share the ideology of Labour Party activists, but who have hitherto provided a wholly credible and necessary alternative government of the moderate, humane and very British left.

Throughout the campaign the decline in the Labour Party's appeal has been epitomized by the leadership of Mr Michael Foot, Yet Mr Foot has only been himself. He is living no lie. The subversion of the Party long predates his leadership, which is only a consequence of it not a cause. A different man might have achieved different things in the party before the electon. though that would have been unlikely of Mr Healey. His unworthy performance in the campaign cannot all be put down to the frustration of an able man confined to play loyal lieutenant to a less able captain.

Labour's decline springs as much from the thicket of little and large deceptions which any able mind at the top of the Labour Party has nowadays to cope with. Those deceptions and contradictions will have to be resolved before the party can hope to give encouragement to those millions of decent Labour voters who would in effect be disenfranchised without a party which could combine the intellectual economic and social strands of British social democracy all under a single leadership. That social democratic tap-root goes deep into the structure of British society, particularly in the north. It is the bedrock element in the Labour vote which will always guarantee Labour about two hundred seats in the Commons. The prospects for Labour making an early recovery from an election defeat this week do not look encouraging, unless the incoming parliamentary party, whatever its strength, manages to discard the Tribunite enthusiasms which have activated its predecessor. Somehow Labour's leaders, and Labour's activists, will have to learn a hard lesson. that there is no point in capturing power within the party if the consequence of doing so is to deprive the party of its general support in the country. That has been the narrow vision of the zealot throughout the ages, and the British people do not like zealots.

Tactical voting and other issues in run-up to polls

From Lord Gladwyn

Sir, Mr Parkinson says that a vote for the Alliance would, in effect, be a vote in favour of a Labour majority in the coming election. This is because it might result in the Conservatives losing certain marginal elections. Indeed it might, thus preventing a Tory "landslide" so much feared and deprecated by Mr

Francis Pym.

The idea that it might also result in the loss of certain seats by the Labour Party does not seem to occur to this eminent, if amateur, psephologist. The belief that it might thus introduce a healthy third force into the rather stale arena of British politics is clearly foreign to his thought

Yours faithfully, GLADWYN, House of Lords. June 30.

From Dr Rhys S. Jones

Sir, To cut through the tangled maze of issues being raised in the present election campaigns, may I suggest a simple parallel?

Mrs Thatcher is sometimes portrayed as too uncompromising. So was Charles de Gaulle when he was elected president of a chaotic France in 1959. French voters realised their country needed a benevolent dictator". Six years later, at the next referendum, in 1965, he was re-elected president by popular suf-frage, as the slow and arduous task of re-stabilizing France was obviously not fully completed. A second term in office was essential for him to "finish the job". Mrs Thatcher has been Prime Minister for only four years ... Last year the French voted for a which has socialist "panacea" which has already proved in practice to be economically unworkable. It had merely sounded plausible.

Are not the recent experiences of our French neighbours relevant and helpful as we consider how to vote on June 9?

Yours etc, RHYS S. JONES, 3 Colwyn House, Bishops Close, Whitchurch, Cardiff.

From Mr Eric Chalker

Sir, Your leader of May 31 defines a landslide as, "a great majority of votes leading to an overwhelming parliamentary victory." You do not acknowledge, however, that an overwhelming parliamentary victory can occur under our silly voting system without even a small majority - in fact, a minority. That, of course, is what usually happens.

In this particular election, the biggest vote indicated for any party so far is just over 50 per cent, for the Lonservatives. Such a vote would be a majority and would itself be a fairly remarkable event, but the only "landslide" would be in seats not

Club rating relief

From Mr James Dowd Sir, With the general election campaign well under way leaders of the main political parties and parliamentary candidates should be aware that one of the greatest threats to the rights of the British people is the intolerable burden of rates imposed on the non profit-making clubs that exist to provide a service for local communities. Without the sports and social clubs many communities would be deprived of facilities for a buge range of sporting and leisure activities ranging over cricket, squash, rugby, tennis, bowls, darts, snooker, fishing and numerous other DUISUIS.

All local authorities are empowered under Section 40 of the General Rate Act 1967 to give up to 50 per cent discretionary rates relief to clubs which are "not established or conducted for profit" and are "wholly or mainly used for purposes of recreation." Yet many authorities heap full rates on the clubs, which means on the members.

Some rates burdens on non-profit-

All Tories, then, must agree with state support for victims of crime, recognizing them as victims of the state's failure to meet its minimal obligations. Labourites like me and Alliance supporters will all subscribe to this, adding the welfare state principle that it's desirable to help the unfortunate.

Whatever the outcome of the general election of June 9, then, it seems reasonable to hope that the new government will try to fulfill a very, very old obligation: its duty to those unfortunate enough to be victims of crime. It is an obligation far 100 long unfulfilled. Yours sincerely.

price of more than £100,000 is expected for a volume containing Albrecht Durer's three major series of woodcuts when it is offered at Sotheby's on June 17. The 48 prints which make up The Life of the Virgin, The Large Passion and The Apocalypse are all in the Latin edition of 1511 and are in generally good condition.

However, these facts alone would not account for such a price. There are also, for instance, single woodcuts from the first two series in the same sale, which carry estimates of up to £1,500 each. What gives the volume its special importance is the splendid gold-stamped vellum

This dates from the last third of the sixteenth century, which is rare enough, and it is stamped with the insignia of the Stadibibliothek Nuremberg, which includes the coats of arms of the City of Nuremberg and of the Imhoff family, which endowed the library.

Durer was the son of a Nuremberg goldsmith, and he lived in the city for much of his life. The Apocalypse of 1498 was one of the first great works which he executed after returning from his first visit to Italy and it is a mixture of Gothic and Remaissance themes and style. This volume may well have been Imhoff's own.

The records of the Stadtbibliothek are incomplete, but the volume appears to have been removed during the Napoleonic Wars by the French general, Andreossi. Its subsequent history is unknown, and Sotheby's are able to say only that it comes from a European collector.

The anthorities at the Stadtbibliothek are anxious that the volume, with its associations with one of Nuremberg's greatest citizens, should return to them. It would certainly be pleasant, and a little ironic, at a time when tingers are so often pointed at Britain for sitting on the treasures of others, if this country should be seen to be acting as the honest broker in the return of another's heritage.

SIR THOMAS PIKE

Marshal of the Royal Air Force Sir Thomas Pike, GCB, CBE, DFC, who died on June 1 at the age of 76, was Chief of the Air Staff from 1960 to 1963 and Deputy Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, from 1964 to 1967. These positions were the culmination of a distinguished career is which he had proved himself a successful night fighter pilot during the Second World War, and later himself flew many of the RAF's latest aircraft.

OBITUARY

Before becoming Chief of the Air Staff, Pike was Air Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Fighter Command; and in previous air staff posts he had played an important role in the procurement of new types of jet aircraft for the RAF. At Fighter Command he fought hard to retain an effective manned aircraft force in the missile age. and was often more outspoken in defence of his views than ministers appreciated. MR DONALD GRAMM

Donald Gramm, the Amerian bass-baritone, died on June 2 in New York. He was 56. Gramm's career was principally in the United States and over the past thirty years he had sung regularly at the Metropolitan and New York City operas as well as being familiar with most other main opera venues in the country. Gramm was born in Milwaukee on February 27 1927 and studied at the Wisconsin College-Conservatory of Music between 1935 and 1944. His opera debut, at the age of 17, was as Raimondo in Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor at the 8th Street Theater of Chicago, and he subsequently continued his studies at the Chicago Music College and with Martial Singher at the Music Academy of the West in Santa Barbara, California. In 1951 he made his New

he began in relatively small parts, was in 1964 but he eventually assumed major roles there, too, including the Doctor in Womeck: Papageno in The Magic Flute and Leporello in Don Giovanni. Excursions abroad included performances with the Opera Nacional of Mexico, at the Spoleto Festival, Aix-en-Pro-vence and Glydebourne where he sang Nick Shadow in 1975 and Falstaff in 1976. Among American premieres in which he participated were Carl Orff's Der Mond; Marti-nu's The Marriage; Berg's Lulu and Verdi's Don Carlos in the original French version.

Though not possessed of a voice of great power, Gramm was noted for the sensitivity and fidelity of his interpretations, as well as for the quality

Top executives of virtually every brewing company in Europe are attending the 19th International Congress of the European Brewery Convention which opens

today at London's Royal Festival Hall

Like the rest of the drinks sector, Britain's brewing industry has been through three difficult years, even though profits have held up remarkably well. There could now be a new turn of events. A big investment programme to make pubs more attractive is one factor as the brewers counter the attractions of other leisure interests.

The Brewers' Society expect sales to stabilise this year at 1982 levels, with a rise of about 0.5 per cent next year. The unpredictable factor is the weather this summer. The spring is likely to have hit sales. Another question mark is the outcome of the General Elec-tion. A Labour win could result in price controls and the trend in brewers' profitability could

How far proposed European Commission regulations will change the present system by which brewers sell wines, spirits and soft drinks to their tenanted pubs remains to be seen. The threat would be even more pronounced were the regu-lations to overturn existing profit sharing arrangements in the extensive takings from prize-giving fruit machines.

The EEC regulations have implications for brewers on the Continent - but that is one European issue which will not be ventilated at the European Brewery Convention's (EBC) biennial Congress which, for the first time in 32 years, is being held in London this week.

The EBC coordinates scientific cooperation in the brewing and the malting industries. Yesterday's opening ceremonics, beginning with an across-London parade of a score of dray horse teams from British breweries, are being followed by a series of working sessions and technical visits throughout this

At the congress, organized by the Institute of Brewing, a wide range of research topics will be explored. These include product safety problems such as those by crop pesticides and nitrogenous elements in water from fertilisers.

There are also new developments in genetic engineering to develop new yeast strains, For consumers, some of the research work could mean improved products. For the brewers, there could be cost benefits, if only in the longer

It is immediate difficulties which are preoccupying the British brewing industry, but there are now better omens.

Beer sales, estimated by Mintel at £6,800m last year, accounts for over half of the total drinks market of £11,750m. This was virtually the same as the year before, price rises having been counter-balanced by the fall in sales volumes and an increasing switch to off-licence sales, including the supermarkets.

Beer sales have declined 12 per cent since the peak year of 1979, though in the first quarter of this year production at 8.3m bulk barrels was 0.5 per cent up on the same quarter of last year. Only a slight improvement, but mainly by way of loans, the Brewers' Society described it Brewers' spending there will as a good sign.

new trend, even if bad summer weather reverses it temporarily. The longer-term problems facing the brewers include the effects of recession, particularly high unemployment. This is a special problem for small localised breweries.

Another problem is how to attract customers whose drinking habits have been changing. A recent Mintel survey of the alcoholic drinks market showed there is less heavy drinking partly because of the breathalyser. Drinking is now likely to be more widespread.

Greater support for the retail trade

The brewers' new investment plans are aimed at coming to terms with these difficulties. Over and above regular expen-diture on maintenance and decoration Britain's 80 brewers are now committed to spending £850m on the 49,000 pubs which they own in the three years to the end of 1985.

Overall support for retailing activities will be £1,180m, 75 per cent of brewers' total capital investment planned over the three years. It is a big change from the 46 per cent spent on the retailing side in the late 1970s when the brewers were building up their production capacity and distribution systems.

Free-house pubs, indepen-dent of the brewers, and clubs will get their share of support,

This scale of investment on the retailing side has led Mr Charles Tidbury, chairman of the Brewers' Society (and also chairman of Whithread), to describe 1983 as likely to be landmark year for the pubs. He said: "better amenities, brighter decor, tastier grub, slicker service, more efficient cellars whatever it is the locals want the local is where they will find

He added: "By setting out deliberately to attract a bigger share of our trade back into pubs we are helping ensure the name prosperity of thousands of small businesses.

The brewers as a group are also resunning national alivertising. The £im promotion, whose punch line is "You should ve been in the pub last night", employs mainly poster sites and radio advertising.

Advertising expenditure on beer by individual companies has also rocketed. Industry estimates suggest that in the first quarter of this year media advertising of beer of all kinds grew by 53 per cent on annual comparison to nearly £13.5m. Although advertising on lager has risen to nearly £5m, that is still only an 11 per cent increase. The overall figure has been swollen by Guinness's big promotion on its "Guinnless"

Apart from the decline in overall beer sales, there is also the continuing swing to off-licence purchases, mostly for home consumption. Ten years ago, off-licences accounted for 20 per cent of all alcohol sales; now the proportion is over 28 per cent. Twelve per cent of all beer sales are made in off-licences, mainly supermarkets.

Up to a point the bigger role played by supermarkets has increased sales for the brewers, though the profit margins are often much slimmer in this part of the take-home trade.

The rate of increase in lager sales had been easing but statistics due out soon are likely to show that lager now accounts for 33 per cent of the overall beer market, up from 31 per

The problem could be that the increase here has come largely from higher sales of cheaper lagers and mostly through the supermarkets rather than other outlets where lager's premium price (and thus better profit margins) has been most

There are seven major brewers in the UK which together account for three-quarters of the nation's output. This is from a total of 78 brewing companies operating 131 breweries, and this, in turn, compares with 96 companies operating 177 brew-eries in 1970. Since 1971, about 90 very small companies have been formed and some 40 pubs now brew their own ale,

But the big seven continue to exercise the major influence on the market. They are Bass, Allied-Lyons, Whitbread. Grand Metropolitan Watney, Courage, Scottish & Newcastle and Guinness, Not far behind are Greenhall Whitley, the northern-based brewery which now brews in excess of 1m barrels a year and owns more than 1,000 pubs. It also owns the Carlsberg lager brewery at Northampton, which produces more than 1m barrels a year.

Guinness and Bass are, arguably, the best known brand names. Guiness is now claimed to be the most widely available brand of beer in the country, excluding Northern Ireland, and has captured between 4 and 5 per cent of the market by volume. Draught Guinness is on sale in more than 50,000 onlicenced outlets.

In spite of their firm grip on the market, the major brewers are involved in a massive advertising promotion, and capital investment spree costing, in the three years to 1985, a total of £1,580m.

All of them now appear to be returning to the marketing of regional beers in an attempt to persuade drinkers that breweries are making ale specifically for their area and taste.

Work your way up to a Director.

Directors Bitter is one of the strongest Draught Beers regularly produced in Britain-a distinctive malty ale appreciated by connoisseurs.

This beer was never originally meant to be consumed by the public but was produced exclusively for the directors of Courage Brewery.

In 1950 the Alton Brewery in Hampshire produced two bottled beers, Alton Red which was naturally conditioned and Alton Blue, a bright version of the same brew.

The directors of Courage persuaded their head brewer to put some Alton Red in cask and it was kept strictly for their delectation.

Guests of the directors sampled the beer and spoke of its quality and a small public demand for it grew.

Eventually it was put into a few pubs under the name of Alton IPA.

But locals knew this was the beer the brewery directors drank and one publican produced his own hand written sign "Directors Bitter."

The name stuck and popularity for Directors rapidly grew, and it is now to be found throughout the South being served only through traditional beer engines or by gravity from the cask.

The RAF even flew out the yeast used in the production of Penguin Ale -"an interesting drop," as described by my Times collegue Allan Hamilton, who was recently in Port Stanley.

However, it is the independents who form the backbone of the brewing industry, despite having their ranks reduced by merger and rationalization since the war. Ironically, Boddingtons have just replaced Ruddles as suppliers of real ales to British Rail's London station buffets, although the two brewers have differing views on the worth of this contract, Boddingtons see it as an important shop window for their products, especially as 30 pubs in the London area will soon be serving the company's products. Ruddles too regard the BR station hars as an important outlet, but did not agree with BR's pricing policy.

Ruddles' agreement with Watney Combe Reid is being seen, however, as a bold step by the two companies; one which is likely to be followed by many other regional independent brewers and one which can only be beneficial to the industry as a

Now it is up to the farmers and the maltsters, whose fields and maltings dominate the agricultural landscape up the east coast of England and Scotland, from Essex and Suffolk to the Straths of Deeside in Scotland. The weather will play an important part in quality of the crop, but so far there is little indication that the brewing industry will not take less than a million tons of malted barley this year.

While the brewers usually buy their mait from local maitsters, a more structured marketing system applies. This guarantees the brewers a definate quality and the producers a market price based on a valuation by a panel under the aegis of the Hops Marketing Board. The panel consists of the Board's crop manager, a hop factor who represents the growers and a buyer representing the brewing industry. Hops are valued anonymously and there is an appeals procedure which can iron out an eventual disagreements.

As the hops come in from the fields of Kent, Hereford and 76,000. Worcestershire - picked mecha-nically rather than by cheery

Two samples are taken from every tenth pocket or bale of hops sent in. One sample goes to the hop factor handling the sale and one to the potential buyer. The factor also ensures that the hops come up to EEC standards.

After various samples have been examined the crops are sorted for inspection by the Board's panel, which takes into account how well the hops have been picked and dried and the presence of any disease. The panel then grades the hops as dant appeal committee.

However, the hop industry is not content to rest on its laurels - or bines - and is constantly researching ways of improving its service to the brewers, although in some cases the result of that research does not find universal favour.

A case in point is the development of pelleted hops and the production of hop extract. Some brewers have adapted to these products readily but many others are opposed to them. The hop industry is not upset by that rightly realizing that the diversity of beers and brewing traditions in Britain is what has kept it vital and looking.

محكنا من الاحل

There are thirty-two independent operating companies within Allied Breweries.

Douglas Strachan Managing Director. Allied Breweries Limited.

We could have shown you the 154_ beers in our portfolio. But modesty, coupled with a shortage of very long bars, prevented us.

Our management style and our product range reflect our commitment to our customers - customers who these: days are more demanding and more diverse than ever before.

We're determined to get as close to them as we can. And who's better qualified to do that?

A remote board in Burton? Or local companies with roots in their own communities and with names, faces and people that are known and recognised?

The answer is obvious, isn't it-

So, five years ago, we carried out the most genuine and the most thoroughgoing programme of devolution the brewing industry has ever seen.

Has it worked in practice?

Are we really giving the customers back what they always wanted?

Allow us to take you on a short pub crawl.

A few cases of cask conditioning

1 Tetley Bitter needs no introduction if you hail from the north: It's the largest ale brand within Allied Breweries and easily the brand leader in the North East and North West.

And now that more and more pubs are serving it in the traditional form-through handpumps-Tetley Bitter is going from strength to strength.

2. Peter Walker was a Liverpool brewery that was acquired by Tetleys in the early sixties. The name disappeared from the scene, as names had a habit of doing in those days.

Now, once again, 'Peter Walker' can be found above the door of 67 pubs that offer traditional pub values and traditionally brewed cask conditioned ales. The results have proved nothing short of outstanding.

Peter Walker's return has been warmly welcomed by the people of Lancashire and Cheshire.

A little bit of local identity and pedigree has been faithfully restored.

3. Ind Coope used to be run as one single business. covering the whole of the south.

Bearing in mind that beer drinkers' tastes in King's Lynn were never going to match those in Truro. Ind Coope set out to restore local managements, each responsible for their own market.

So it was in 1979 that some famous old names like Benskins, Taylor Walker and Friary Meux returned.

So, too, did Halls Oxford & West Brewery Co., now independent of Ind Coope, to quench the thirsts of the West Country.

These companies offer their own individual traditional draught beers, and pubs which once again look and feel like pubs:

As a result, Ind Coope has been transformed: confidence and profits are surging ahead.

4. Ansells Mild and Bitter have been household names in the Midlands for over a hundred years.

Indeed, Ansells' drinkers will tell you that they're unbeatable.

The judges in the Great Western Beer Festival obviously agree, Because when they adjudicated the caskconditioned beers, Ansells Mild took first prize for Mild in 1981 and 1982, while Ansells Bitter took first prize for Bitter in 1982.

Will anyone still swallow keg beers? You might suppose that traditional draught ales have elbowed out keg beers.

Until you look at the success of John Bull. We brewed it to succeed a long line of quality beers.

for drinkers looking for a consistent, reliable pint. Launched in 1980 by the Romford Brewery Co., its sales have exceeded our best expectations.

Available in more than 30,000 outlets. John Bull is doubling the sales of the product it replaced.

Meanwhile, north of the border, the Alloa Brewery has scored a major success with Diamond Export and Diamond Heavy Obviously, our keg beers still have a lot to offer.

Lager. Quality no matter what the gravity. Brewing lagers to a consistently high standard right across the gravity range is a daunting brief.

But not for the Wrexham Lager Beer Company. As the oldest lager brewery in the U.K. (it celebrated its centenary in 1982) it has an unrivalled depth of experience and skill.

Which goes a long way to explaining why their lagers' praises have been sung in recent lager competitions.

At Brewex '83 it won first prize in the U.K. draught lager class for products between 1030° and 1037° with Wrexham Draught Lager.

In the UK draught lager class for products between 1038° and 1043° it gained second prize with draught Lowenbrau

And in the international bottled lagers competition. for lagers between 1044° and 1056,° with a field of 64 entrants from all over the world, the brewery gained second prize with Skol Special Strength.

National brands. Aren't they having a flat time of it?

Quite the contrary.

Long Life, our renowned brand leader in England and Wales, has increased its market share in the packaged light, pale and export market.

(No mean achievement when you consider the competition in the premium quality sector.)

Skol remains Allied Breweries' biggest brand having consolidated its position as the best known lager in the UK and one of the most famous beer brands in

And bearing in mind the trend towards the low gravity products in the lager market, we're delighted with the rise and rise of our premium quality Lowenbrau range:

As Lowenbrau's UK agents, we can proudly say that it's brewed to the Reinheitsgebot - the strict system of quality control exercised in Germany.

And we can proudly add that there's a handsome increase in Lowenbrau sales since last year.

A flat time of things? Not for our brands at any rate.

Are our 'take-home' beers being taken home? In one of the fastest-growing sectors of the market we're delighted to report that we have the fastestgrowing company.

Namely, Allied Breweries Take Home Limited. Within the last year it has achieved market leadership in England and Wales.

The Oranjeboom boom.

As you've seen, reintroducing well-loved brews to their former markets has been a particularly successful policy of ours in Britain.

But it's also met with success abroad, too.

You only have to consider the story of Oranjeboom. When we acquired the Oranjeboom brewery in Rotterdam in 1968, Oranjeboom had been withdrawn from the Dutch market and retained merely for sales

But when we relaunched it a few months ago, such was the surge of demand from hundreds of local licensees. that they formed queues outside the brewery's order office.

The return of the satisfied customer. We hope you've enjoyed our rather circuitous

We hope you have the chance to sample a good few of the brews we've passed along the way.

We hope, too, you'll find evidence to support our claim that we are closer than ever before to the heartbeat of our customers.

Close enough, literally, to overhear their requests at the bar.

Be it for traditional beers, conviviality, food or entertainment

We're immensely proud of what we've achieved. Quite clearly our policy is the right one.

Because last year, when beer consumption went down, guess what happened?

Allied sales went up.

Pound retains strong sentiment

The group has been hit hard by overcapacity in the North American newsprint market.
This led to a $30-a-tonne cut in the price of newsprint last November. Though the group's newspaper interests - Reed owns the Daily Mirror should show a good increase in profits and other publishing activities show continued strength, pack-aging activities are likely to show a severe downturn.

DoT denies Trafalgar report

The Department of Trade has denied reports that it had approved the takeover of P & O by Trafalgar House, subject to certain conditions. No such assurance was given, nor could it be given, the DoT said.

The decision on whether the bid could or should be referred to the Monopolies Commission would be taken by the Secretary of State for Trade only after he had considered the advice of Sir Gordon Borrie, director general of fair trading Sir Gordon has not yet tendered his advice, and is not expected to do so for some days, the DoT said.

• FMC SHARE SALE: A big slice of the equity of FMC, Britain's largest meat processing company, will be ofered for sale this week. The National Farm-ers' Union, a leading share-holder in FMC, is planning to sell us shares to raise money to repay loans. Morgan Grenfell, the bankers, is preparing a prospectus to handle the offer

• DEBT WARNING: More international debt shocks are to come, Mr Geoffrey Bell, a member of the influential Group of Thirty, has warned. Mr Bell said debtor countries needed long-term, interest-free funding under International Monetary Fund supervision. Without such assistance debts would mount and banks might he forced to amalgamate.

 BONDS ISSUE: Canada is thought to be planning a bonds issue of perhaps up to CanSibn next week, according to dealers and analysis in Montreal. They expect the issue will reopen existing bonds maturing in 1986, 1989, 1993, and 2003.

● CONTRACT WIN: A £20m contract to supply and instal equipment upgrading 13 universities in South Korea has been won by the Cambridge division of Associated British (ABMTM).

Growing disquiet over M1

From Maxwell Newton

The American economic recovery is now gathering momentum. The second quarter real gross national product is expected to show an annual growth rate of as much as 7 per cent. The third quarter should show a rise of between 5 and 6 per cent a year.

Retail sales are beginning to bound ahead, as indicated by the buoyant results for the big department store chains for May. The financial markets have begun to show more and more nervousness about the continuance of the expansionary monctary policy that fired this rapid recovery. Last Friday, despite a modest fall of $400m in money M1, interest rates actually rose after the number was reported.

Since early last month, commodity prices have ceased their rise. The price of gold has fallen sharply, the dollar has risen strongly, bond prices have weakened, and short-term intereși rates have gone up.

The financial markets are becoming concerned that this energetic economic recovery will soon be translated into renewed inflation. Last week, it seemed as if the

The Federal Reserve is incapable of responding to the urgent policy issues being presented by the combination of a rapid economic recovery and a still expansionary monet

City Comment Fitch voters

kept in the dark

The long battle between Linfood and Safeway for control of the 106 shops in the Key Markets chain is fast approaching a bitter climax.

Fitch Lovell, the owner of Key Markets, is now in favour of accepting the £40.8m offer for the chair from Linfood, according to the last letter it sent its shareholders. What is has yet to say publicly, though it has apparently murmured the fact privately, is that it is going to stick with this recommendation in spite of it being supeseded by an offer from Safeway which is £4m higher.

The reason they wish to turn down the extra £4m will no doubt be explained by the Fitch directors to their shareholders before the latter are asked to vote on the issue on Friday though the not always veiled threat by Linfood to bid for the whole company if it could not have Key Markets perhaps had something to do with it.

Less easy to explain is the length to which Fitch Lovell has gone to try to keep Safeway at arms length in recent weeks having so warmly welcomed the company when it made its first, much lower bid for Key Markets.

It was only yesterday, for example, that Fitch Lovell supplied Safeway with its shreholder register - virtually the last possible moment - and this makes it almost impossible for Safeway to write to Fitch Lovell shareholders to tell them of the existance of their higher offer, and have a hope of influencing them and their proxy votes.

There are perhaps good reasons for the delay. But it still seems odd to ask shareholders to vote on a deal of this magnitude. which involves an effective auction between two powerful adversaries, without giving all sides the right and opportunity to talk direct to the voters.

British goods mean British jobs

"There is a worldwide demand for goods of high quality and value and there is no reason why they should not be made in Britain. Increased demand for British goods means more British jobs. If British leadership is determined, we can produce in Britain goods of high quality and value which today are often imported" LORD SIEFF, Chairman.

SUPPORT FOR BRITISH INDUSTRY

- Over 90% of our clothing, home furnishings and foodstuffs that can be grown or processed in temperate climates are produced in Britain. We buy from abroad only when we cannot find innovation, high quality and value at home.
- Many Marks & Spencer suppliers have invested heavily in modern technology. They have further increased productivity, and the quality and value of their goods.
- More than 170,000 people in the U.K. today are employed making, distributing and selling St Michael goods.
- We are served by suppliers who are among the best in the world. Many have operated in partnership with Marks & Spencer for many years, sharing a common objective to satisfy our customers.

TRADING HIGHLIGHTS

- We opened 316,000 sq.ft. of new selling space worldwide. This included 200,000 sq.ft. in the U.K., where we invested £100 million in building, fixtures and equipment.
- Between March 1982 and March 1983, the prices of our general merchandise increased by 1.5% and our foods by 2.3%.
- We increased volume sales as a result of improved quality and values.
- Total exports from the U.K. to our overseas customers and our stores in Europe and Canada amounted to £67.9 million.

Sun shines on the 11 survivors from the winter of discontent

Of the 14 players chosen to make up the England party for the Prudential World Cup. starting on Thursday, all but three - Allott, Dilley and Gatting - were in Australia last winter. In view of England's record on that tour, any fewer changes would have been unacceptable.

What the selectors must be hoping is that the advantages of playing in England will make all the difference to an unsuccess-ful side. It is also true, of course. that the cupboard is pretty bare.
"We talked about everyone", said a selector. Among those he was referring to were Athey, Bairstow, Pocock, Pringle, Stov-old, Taylor and Thomas.

In the first match, against New Zealand at The Oval, Randall, Jesty and Cowans will be the three left out. Tavare will open with Fowler, with Gower at No 3, and Gatting as the sixth bowler. In case of injury to one of the other five, a spare bowler needs to be included, which, when it is not Gatting, will have to be Jesty. Randall is the alternative choice to Fowler.

Although are 1975, will fave both in the 14, though on of them played at a time.

Although are Amies. Fletcher. Tavaré, Gower and Lamb, and Cowans to Allott and Dilley.

Marks owes his selection, ahead of Miller, Hemmings and Pocock, to the fact that he eems at his most effective in this type of cricket. In the oneday matches in Australia, the likes of Hookes and Border were unsure of what to make of it when Marks threw the ball well up. Richards, for West Indies, and Majid Khan, for Although seven of the 1975 squad – Amiss, Fletcher, Hayes, Knott, Old, Underwood and Wood - are still playing first-class cricket, none of them survives. Of the England team who lost the 1979 final to West Indies, Botham, Gower, Ran-dall and Willis reappear. How far England get this time made depend on the form of Botham, but that has been the case, and not only in one-day cricket, for the last four or five years.

In Australia last winter the following conversation took place Fred Trueman, inquisit-orially, to Alex Bedser: "Why didn't you bring David Thomas to Australia then?" Bedser to Trueman: "Would you have expected to come if you had just

still lucky

Middlesex's luck held firm on Saturday when the draw was made for the semi-finals of the Benson and Hedges Cup. John Woodcock writes. Having won the toss on Friday, to beat Gloucestershire— anything, surely, would have been anything, surely, would have been preferable to this - they now find themselves with the added bonus of a home tie against Lancashire. In a draw monopolized by the Home Counties, Kent will play Essex

It is the only one-day competition Middlesex have not yet won, so they could be forgiven for thinking that their turn may have come. Lancashire, had a convincing win over Northamptonshire last week, Kent and Essex are always good for a hard match. Three times winners of the competition, Kent white's of the competition, kent have a better record in it than any other county. Atlantic City

It was a good weekend for the Fraziers. In earlier bouts in Atlantic City Marvis's younger brother, Hector, won a Junior welterweight bout and his cousin Rodney Frazier, beat Josh Bryant with a second round knockout in a heavymicht. round knockout in a heavyweight contest.

Bugner, weighing in at 237th against Frazier's 201th, was put under pressure from the outset and was obviously pacing himself against the younger man. The disparity between the judges' decisions was striking. Each gave the contest to Fazier at 6-4, 8-2, and 10-0. Bugner said: "I wonder if they were at the same fight. If you are talking about good clean punches—forget the aggression—I think I scored. The decision was all screwed up."

He thought his opponent would become a good loser but that he should be a cruiserweight. Frazier insisted that since he had won all 10 of his professional contests as a heavyweight he was happy to take on the bigger man, adding that "in time my body will mature and get some good solid extra weight."

Joe Frazier, meanwhile, said of his old rival: "He can still fight. He gave Marvis 10 good rounds. Marvis took some body shots that would have knocked the average young boy down. Bugner didn't have any respect for Marvis going into the fight but he got plenty respect when he realized that Marvis could hit."

The young Frazier happily acknowledged Bugner's assertion that "he's not as good as his father who is a living legend." Miss Drury restyled

Cathy Drury, who spent most of the winter re-shaping her game, won the women's singles in the grass court tennis tournament sponsored by GMC-Moben Kitchens at Manchester yesterday. After a day in which both finalists played three matches, she defeated Brenda Remilton of Australia 7-6, 7-6 "I am just hoping that this day's work will inspire someone to give me a wild card into Wimbledon – I have never played in the singles there before", she said afterwards.

Two Americans contested the men's final, which was won by Tom Mayotte, the number two seed and semi-finalist at Wimbledon last year. He beat fifth seed, Pat Du Pre.

Back to a club of happy memories

Jimmy Connors returns to the place where he mucd up for last summer's Wimbledon success when he defends his title in the Stella Artois grass court championships, which start at Queens Club, in London, today.

Connors, perhaps somewhat unexpectedly then, beat John McEnroe in straight sets, but it prepared him for a successful attempt to regain his Wimbledon crown three weeks later.

McEnroe will again be his chief challenger, but there is the added threat of Ivan Lendl. The Czechoslovak dislikes playing on grass but realizes he must compete successfully on the surfaces if he is to be considered as world No. I above either of the Americans.

Connors opens the centre court programme this afternoon with a first round match against Lloyd from Nigeria.

Four of the world's top men players will be missing from the Wimbledon championships which begin on June 20. Among the omissions in the entry list is Peter McNamara, the 27-year-old Australian, whose injury problem means that he, and Paul McNamee, his fellow countryman, cannot defend the men's doubles title they won last year. McNamee will now partner brian Gottfried of The United States.

The other three leading players who have not entered are Yannick

Spain, who won at Bournemouth in April: and Elliot Teltscher of America, nose of whom are least of play on grass. To confirm the rising standard of play among some of the lesser known players, Roscoe Tanner, who was a wimbledon singles finalist only four years ago, was the last player to be accepted this time. There are no surprise omissions from the women's list.

Ian Woosnam, who stands not much higher than his golf bags, won the Silk Cut Masters tournament at St. Pierre, Chepstow, yesterday thereby sending the long suffering Welsh spectators home in a glow of national pride after Philip Parkin had also won the Amateur championships the previous day. "It'll do wonders for Plaid Cymru on Thursday" someone said.

pursuit, together with Nick Faldo and Gordon Brand senior in the match ahead, the pressure was unrelenting, but Woosnam stood the test magnificently, never once going above par until he arrived at the 18th knowing that he had four putts from 10 feet for the title. Woosnam had a last round of 65, six under par, for a total of 269 to beat Gallacher (68 yesterday) by three strokes and Faldo (also 68) by four.

Severiano Ballesteros had re-moved himself from the reckoning moved himself from the reckoning with a 76 on Saturday but nothing it seems can remove him from the limelight. He played another round bristling with incident, from the moment he opened with three successive birdies. He finished with a 68, but it all counted for nothing in the end, for an eagle eyed spectator had detected an irregularity in his card on Thursday and he had to be disqualified.

A recent development in the field of public relations enables spectators to acquire photocopies of players' cards. One took Ballesteros's card home and telephoned the tournament office yesterday morning to point out that the Spanish champion had not started 4, 2, 3, as the card stated but 4, 3, 2, as had correctly been reported to the press.

Parkin's victory has the ring of conviction

Younger men than 21-year-old Philip Parkin have won the Amateur championship, but it is hard to think of anyone who has shown more eagerness than he did at Turnberry on Saturday. His defeat of an experienced rival American Walker Cup player, Jim Holtgrieve, aged 33, by five and four was the climax to a memorable fortnight for him and he was not ashamed to show his delight.

That same eagerness had sustained him through an arduous week of rough weather, the coldness of which severely tried the strong tained him through an arducus game. Apart perhaps from a more week of rough weather, the coldness of which severely tried the strong American entry. Parkin seems to enjoy even the weather, or rather to ignore it for he never bothered to ciothe his lanky frame in water-proofs, and he was with difficulty restrained between his matches from rushing out to watch how others were faring.

Parkin is a Welsh international because, although born in York-shire, his home is now in Newtown, Montgomeryshire, of whose nine hole course he is a member. He has spent one year at a university in spent one year at a university in Texas which insists on attention to sudies for first year men, so that Amercian golf coaching has not had time to make much influence on his Parkin's victory had the ring of conviction. He had led the qualifying by two stroles; then on the giant Alisa course that yielded only five birdies between the two of them throughout the final, Parkin was 74 for the morning round and level par in the afternoon. He jumped into an early lead and was never caught; the only doubt came when he took three putts at the fourth, sixth and eighth and one began to wonder whether he would be forgiven for failing to take his chances. But he steadied and its aggressive start after lunch changed all that.

Neither drove specially well but Holtgrieve's tee shots proved more destructive. rough course. The most spectactule was Cambridge University's win it was Cambridge University's win in the men's heavyweight eights, coming home almost 2½ lengths clear of London University, with the Australian and French national the Australian and French national cights tambling in their wake.

Cambridge, with seven of the Boat Race crew who lost to Oxford by 4½, lengths nine weeks 280, led the cights final from start to finish. In the rough conditions, the French and Australians were surprisingly unable to cope. Only last week in Ratzeburg, the Australians had broken the course record, but yesterday they were rowed down by London University in the last 200 metres, to finish in third place.

On this performance, Cambridge University have posted their intentons for Henley's Grand this University have posted their intentions for Henley's Grand this year, not to say the 1984 Boat Race.

To crown the weekend, the Cambridge University women's beat club won the eights race on Saturday and gave the ARA national squad a close race for second place yesterday. Seven nations shared the medals over the weekend. British crews won seven of the men's heavyweight events, with a strong Italian lightweight men's team taking away hive gold medals. Cudmore moves back on the map

By John Nichells

Harold Cudmore achieved his first sgnificant win since resigning from the Victory America's Cap syndicate, when he sailed the Irish yacht Justine in the Seine Bay Race, which ended at Gosport yesterday. The race, organised by the Royal Ocean Racing Club, was used as one of a series of trials for the selection of teams for the Admiral's Cup later in the season. The Irish and French. as well as the British, nominated the race as a trial for their potential race as a trial for their potential teams. Of the British candidates, Dragon (Brian Saffery-Cooper) had the best corrected time, followed by Whiriwind (Noel Lister) and Black Top (David Atkinson). Yeoman XXIII (Robin Aisher), the early season pacemaker in non-trial races, could only manage fourteenth place.

leaders, including Justine, all came from the medium area of the ratings hand. Light winds at the start kept the fleet together on the first leg and although the larger boats, led by another of the Irish, Moonduster (Denis Doyle) were inevitably first to finish, they were unable to gain

Dinghy men get the wind up

The first race of the 470 class world championship was aban-doned at Weymouth yesterday when a succession of depressions when a succession of depressions made racing impossible. John Nicholls writes. The 71 entries, in what is potentially the season's premier dingity event, did attempt a start in the monning, but after they had completed two legs of their first round and seen the wind swing season of the start of the star Conditions, however, did not suit the higher-rated boats and the abruptly from one direction another and back again, the race was stopped and they waited for the breeze to settle before trying again.

But within a short space of time, gusts of 38 knots swept through the fleet and capsized most of the dinghies. No sooner were they righted than they were knocked over 1800 and eventually these was and again and eventually there was no option but to abandon the race and try again today.

national 16-12 on a soft and slow-paced Lancaster Park on Saturday.

This represented a marvellous transformation by the Lions. The coat of many drab colours ill-finingly worn for the last weeks, turned into a well-knit, total effort. Sadly for them, they could not put on the cloak of glory by taking a victory which would have uplifted the Lions and very likely turned. New Zealand rugby upside down. It was a close-run thing, with the New Zealand rugby upside down.

It was a close-run thing, with the Lious 9-6 ahead at half-time, by courtesy of Olise Campbell's boot. The All-Blacks drew level and then led 13-9 from the one try of the match. They were only 13-12 and hanging on for dear life until two minutes from the end when Hewson lobbed over a 40-metre dropped goal which gave New Zealand precious breathing space as the last seconds ticked by.

The closeness of the scores guaranteed thrills, excitement and agony for the crowd of 44,000 on a perfect winter's afternoon. But the excitement was something of an illusion for there was too many mistakes, and too many chances missed, especially by the Lions, for hanging on by their fingernails and had the Lions taken a try and conversion they would have taken command of the match. But the command of the match. But the Lions did not score the crucial ry and all they could acquire, after 15 minutes of control, was a penalty goal to Campbell. So, the All-Blacks reached half-time still in touch at 6-9, and in the fifty-first and fifty-sixth minutes found a penalty goal from Rewson and a rather formitous try by Mark Shaw, the flanker, flanker.

Fate was not kind to the Lions.

Poker began the break to the left by Wilson by a pass flat, but not forward. Dunn carried on the thrust, the ball went loose, shuttled this way and that, and ended in Shaw's way and man, and ended in Shaw's arms. He ran to the left, found Dunn and Hewson, with Fraser taken by Ringland, fired a hopeful pass infield which deflected from Ackerman's shoulder and the ball lay there until Shaw picked up the gift and scored.

While Melville begins his preparation for the Lions match against West Coast on Wednesday, Holmes, the scram ball, may need a second operation on his knee, after undergoing surgery on Saturday, Holmes was also injured exactly three years ago during the Lions tour of South Africa, which Melville, aged 22, has played for England at schools, colts, Under 23 and B team level. His arrival in New Zealand will bring England's share of he Lious touring party to nine which is more than any of the other hame countries. The Wasps scrum-half has recently returned from touring Passaria with the England

And there lay the Lions' real problem. They started well, with the forwards competitive and skilled in the lineout and loose where they were supposed to be suspect. The backs moved well, with Campbell the midfield maestro. After 20 minutes of probing play by both sides, the score stood at 6-6, a penalty goal and dropped goal by Campbell and two penalty goals by

Instead, Ackerman, so steady of tread, tried to crash through when he should have passed, and the All-Blacks managed to stills the move and escape with a penalty kick. At another time Campbell was poised for a dropped goal, but the All-Blacks took the ball on Fitzgerald's loose-head. Not long after half-time, Andy Dalton called for his backs to move the ball wide, and was immediately rewarded with the long build-up to Shaw's try. Haden and Whetton gained some command in the lineout, but Colclough and Paxton kept the Lions at level-pegging there. Loveridge was as serviceable as ever, but Dunn, his partner, was shaky, and the All-Blacks owed much to Taylor's tackling of Irwin

Even at the death, before Hewson's long dropped goal for a four-point lead, the Lions had their chances. Campbell dropped for goal and slipped. Eaton puts American pedal in circulation

By John Wilcockson

By winning the 26th Milk Race, which finished in Blackpool on Saturday, Matt Eston confirmed the growing structure of American cycling in the world arena. On the final stage of 65 miles across the es, the six members of the United States team rode themselves to a standstill in defence of the cellow jersey that Eaton slipped on for the first time before the start in Bradford.

One of the danger points for Eaton was the zig-zag climb of Blackshaw Head, at Hebden Bridge. Here, the crowd - one of the largest to watch the race for many years— saw Eaton pedal up the one in four hill with great assurance, always among the first 12 riders. His colleagues, Andrew Hampsten, matched the pace of Palov from Czechoslovakia to take the special prize at the summit Also in front were, the race's leading climber, Ludek Styds of Czechoslovakia, Tony Doyle, the British pro-fessional, and Jeff Williams, the British amateur champion. The five leaders' diverse team interests meant that the whole field regrouped by Buraley, and re-mained together until the dying miles of the stage. Several lone attacks were made, with the final one, less than a mile from home, giving Per Sandahl of Denmark his second stage win of the race. Malcohn Ellion, the winner of a record number of six stages, was second place. His third place overall was the best by a British amateur for five years. With better guidance and winning breaks, unlike the two men who finished above him, Eaton, aged 23, and the Swede Stefan Brykt, aged 18. on admitted that he was lucky winner, but he deserves cred for infiltrating the winning moves on the first, third and fifth stages to Bristol, Welwyn Garden City and British passport until three years free initially that one even wondered whether she would be trainable," he said.

My earlier reference to Goryms, and his absence from the Derby, is prompted by the knowledge that no one would have been keener than Hern to have run him had the ground been good or better still firm. When trying to weigh up the 2000 Guineas earlier in the season I discussed Gorytus with his trainer at Bath five days before, "Ail I can tell you is that he is an infinitely better horse on good ground than he is on soft." were his parting words. And they still hold good. So when he took Gorvens out of last Wednesday's Derby, Hern was putting the interes of his horse and his owners first. before the occasion. His was a professional decision and he is to be admired for it, not criticised, just as he is to be applauded for the way that he and his staff have, in Carson's own words, transformed Sun Princess from a potential runaway into a potential world beater.

Just how good, I asked Carson on Saturday, bearing in mind the fact that he had won the Oaks twice before for Hern on Dunfermline and Bireme, Pausing a while to ponder the question, Carson replied that he thought that Sun Princess could be the best of the three, because

Dick Hern, his staff at West "she has much more speed than Ilsley, and Willie Carson were the other two, and she stays as putting 12 lengths daylight This was a supremely pro-fessional triumph for all those pursuers in the straight — a involved, and no one was distance matched only by Never quicker than Carson to pay Say Die in the 1954 St Leger in tribute to the backroom boys at any classic this century - Sun West Ilsley. "They've put in a Princess indicated that a season lot of hard work teaching this which started so miserably, due filly to settle, because she was so to the appalling weather, could come alight later on.

The great thing about the connexions of the winners of both the Derby and the Oaks this year is that they are not "Let the best horse win - to hell with commercialism" could well be their motto. Sir Michael Sobell and his son-in-law Lord Weinstock, Sun Princess's proud owners, have long been staunch supporters of European racing. As owner-breeders on a big scale with the Ballymaco stud, they belong to the old school, the type who were once the backbone of our racing, but who are, sadly, a fast disappearing breed.

As the major shareholders in Troy who carried their colours so triumphantly five years ago, they had more to lose than anyone when their borse died in such tragic circumstances last month Nothing, can compensate them fully for Troy's premature death, but Sun Princess's victory was a nice tonic for them.

Apparently, Sun Princess has a nice two-year-old half-sister to Troy in training with Ian Balding, whose value must have increased tremendously over-night. By English Prince, a Petingo horse who won the Irish Derby, but subsequently exported too hastily from Ireland to Japan, out of a mare whose hill. "To hell with this, I'm sire won the French Derby, Sun getting out of bere," Carson said

Willie Carson looks round for non-existent dangers to Sun Princess in the Oaks.

Princess boasts a pedigree which has a mile and a half written all over it. The exciting aspect of her breeding is that he has such speed, too. It will be interesting to see whether her connexions opt for the Irish Oaks next, or hether they wait for a tilt at the King George VI and Queen Elizabeth Diamond Stakes at Although Dahlia won the two in 1973, the odds must be against Sun Princess contesting both races as they are only a week apart. It would not surprise me to see her go for the lrish Oaks and then be trained for the St Leger, thus following in Dunfermline's footsteps.

The speed to which Carson constantly referred to was apparent when Sun Princess passed threequarters of the field in a dramatic burst riding down Tattenham Hill on the outside. The move was prompted by some jostling at the top of the hill. "To hell with this, I'm dropped back suddenly into the French filly Alexandric, causing a chain reaction. Alexandrie was the chief sufferer, because she was knocked into the rails. Freddie Head, her rider, came and Shore Line fourth but backers of those fancied fillies back with paint on his boots, but most sportingly he did not complain that that was the reason for his filly's inept performance.

Seeing Head in trouble, Carson, who was just behind, immediately took evasive action, and eased to the outside. Giving Sun Princess a little rein. they passed horse after horse down Tattenham Hill, and suddenly found themselves more or less in front as they straightened for home.

From then on, it was a procession with Sun Princess dreawing further and further ahead. "She must be bloody good," a colleague remarked in the aftermath — "she is bloody good," Bruce Hobbs retorted as he reflected somewhat ruefully the crashing defeat that Sun to himself after Fields of Spring dropped back suddenly into the French filly Alexandrie, causing he trains. The feeling has spread throughout the whole racing community that with the circumstances I will not be surprised if the powers that be within United Racecourse, who controls Epsom, Sandown and Kempton, consider reducing the meeting to three days. They could hold Epsom from Wednesdy to Friday, with the Oaks on Friday, and then perhaps, stage a casual day at Kempton on the Saturday. From my soundings the move would be

Caerleon comfortably holds L'Emigrant

By Desmond Stoneham, French Racing Correspondent Paris

History nearly repeated itself at Chantilly yesterday when Pat Eddery brought Caerleon to a fine victory in the Prix du Jockey Club (French Derby). Just a year ago Assert won the French classic for David O'Brien by three lengths and vertering Caerleon was by avertify David O'Brien by three lengths and yesterday Cacrleon won by exactly the same distance for Vincent O'Brien. Once again it was the famour colours of Robert Sangster first past the post in the Jockey Club where the numer-up was L'Emigrant and the third, Esprit du Nord, was ridden by Lester Piegott.

As Stavros Niarchos had shares in both the winner and runner-up, the two horses were coupled in the betting and Caerleon's win divided on the Pari-mutuel was 2.40 francs by the horses in fact started at 28-1, which was reflected in the place dividends which paid odds of just 4.1. Vincent O'Brien was mable to be at Chantilly because of the Irish air traffic control strike which was only L'Emigrant ra called offat the last moment so he was final furiong.

represented by Tommy Burns. The plan now for Caerleon is not exactly inalized by either he or Solford could line up for the Irish Sweep Derby on June 25 and O'Brien also has his eyes on both the Coral Eclipse Stakes and King IV and Queen Elizabeth Diamond Stakes.

Pat Eddery rode to absolute perfection and Carrieon was never further back than third position. Most of the pace was cut out by Pictra winds Dom Pasquini was from of Cacricon. With some two furlongs left to run, Eddery had an immediate reaction from Caerleon who lengthened his stride impressi vely and buit up a convincing lead as L'Emigrant was produced up the middle of the course by Cash Asmussen.

Eddery said after this mouting: "I have ridden some great horse and this must be one of them. We have always considered him a classic animal but only now has he found the good ground he needs." Lester Piggott had every chance on Esprit du Nord who now goes for either the Irish Sweeps Derby or the

McHargue makes ground

By Our Irish Racing Correspondent

The American jockey Darryl McHargue, the subject of a good deal of criticism from Irish racepoers since his arrival in this country, showed himself in a more flattering light at the Phoenix Park on Saturday when he got Iron Leader up close home to win the £20,000 added Kilfrush/What A Guest Stakes over a mile.

Pat Eddery's mount Beaudelaire, unbeaten in his two previous starts, was the odds-on favourite to make a winning commencement to his three-year-old career in this contest.
For a long way he looked certain to justify his market position but in away and he made virtually all the justify his market position but in heavy ground the lack of a previous run took its toll and he was worn down by the persistence of the winner, whose biggest previous victory had been achieved in the Madrid Handicap at The Curragh.

Dermot Weld nominated the where he will contest the Queen running. After he had shaken off fredenphil. Eddery eased him up and a late flourish from Sand Castle (received 71b) got him within a half a length at the post. Eddery said afterwards that the best of the Irish Dermot Weld nominated the two-year-olds were as good as winner as a Royal Ascot runner anything he had observed in England so far this season.

LORD JUSTICE WATKINS, giving the judgment of the court, said that the only issue upon each of the charges under section 62(a) which the court had to resolve was whether each entry undoubtedly made on the claim forms was to the appellant's knowledge false in a material varieties.

The verdicts on these charges were unsafe and unsatisfactory, inter alia, because the summing-up did not contain a sufficient direction on what was meant by "material particular". The court should have been directed to the effect that to be material a particular must be such as would be likely to play a part in influencing the decision to allow or disallow the claim.

The charges under section 69 were alternative to charges of theft of the moneys paid as allowances, of which the appellant was acquitted. Since all the ingredients of theft save that of dishonesty were admitted, the court must have acquitted the appellant of stealing the moneys because they were not satisfied that he had behaved dishonestly in set out in a charge under section 69.

In the present case the particulars were stated in that form. An allegation of acting improperly being therein contained, the state of the appellant's mind at the relevant time was bound to be considered.

The Assistant Judge Advocate General rightly directed the court that mens rea was an element in the offence, but further directions be

LORD JUSTICE WATKINS, ag the judgment of the court, that the only issue upon each of the court.

An equally compelling reason for quashing the convictions was that really this was a situation in which the appellant was either guilty of acting dishonestly to obtain money he was not entitled to, or his conduct in presenting his claims was in no sense of the word improper or

Party HQ: your starter for No. 10?

There is one group of political full-timers whose careers will be unaffected by the election results. Win or lose, the work of the political parties' administrators and researchers will go

Conservatives, Labour and the Alliance between them have about 1000 staff to provide the professional backbone for a largely amateur career. Work within the party organization has provided vital pre-Parliamentary experience for a number of Cabinet Ministers. On the Labour side, both Peter Shore and Denis Healey spent time heading sections of the headquarters research department, while the last Parliament included a small army of ex-Central Conservative

As a way into a political career, therefore, a job with the Party can be an excellent starter. But calculating carearists need to be circumspect about their allegiance. The Conservative Party employs most and has by. far the greatest range of opportunities but it works in mysterious ways. Labour is more open, but more modest in scale. The Liberals and the Social Democrats, apart from admit-ting that their staff was tiny, none of their spokesmen had any idea who their full-timers were, or what they

The size of the Conservative Party agency network is justly famous for its impressive proportions. About two-compared with a mere 70 constituencies which have Labour Party agents. For the eager whizz-kid, oiling the party machinery out in the sticks may not be the best way to political stardom. Instead it is London, and the intellectual hothouse of the research departments which probably provide the best environment for nuturing talent,

Marjorie Harris maps out a plan of attack in the fight for jobs

The two main parties agree that the ideal candidate for a research job is university-educated, and aged under 30. But that is as far as their agreement goes.

Monica Foot based at Labour's unfashionable and politically remote based in Walworth Road said: "We normally get over 300 applicants for every vacancy and of those about 100 are good, suitable candidates. A lot of our people nowadays have done academic research. We also like to see active party membership, student union involvement and maybe experience as a local councillor or as a trades unionist".

Keenness, however, is not necess-arily a virtue where the Conservatives are concerned, although hard work and the ability to write well are essential. "I suppose our recruits tend to be Conservative supporters but it is not a particular requirement", I was party was almost taboo. But reality belies the apparant langour of the admission that "We've only ever advertised once. That was for an economist in The Economist. We only got three applicants and it was a complete disaster. In fact the Conservatives have a small team of trient spotters, including Lord Beloff, out scouring for promising offspring of the Eastablishment. Names of likely candidates mostly young men from the City, are discreetly passed on A few, like John Whittingdale, head of the political section, come straight from university. It is unashamedly the Old Boy net.

However valuable and interesting the work in the party headquarters may be it is usually only a stepping stone to other things. Aside from the truly committed apparatchiks who go on to the House of Commons or get on to the House of Commons or set jobs as special advisers to Secretaries of State most proceed into other kinds of research, often in the media. As both parties confessed, having such a nursery for future opinion-formers is very useful. "You know it can be valuable occasionally to phone up an example on a networkers and not present the second participation." ex-colleague on a newspaper and put him right about things - and of course it is terrific for them having built up such a lot of contacts." Whatever their offer differences, on the merits of political researchers the two parties

First give yourself a job

How hard finding a job will be depends on your abilities and the state of the economy but also on the spirit Edward Fennel looks at in which you attempt to be successful Whether you have experience or are looking for your first job, you still need to bring the same attack to the process and the same thought to analysing what is right for you. As well as what you would ideally like to do it is sensible to consider realistic alternatives where there may be better chances of being accepted.

If you are a school leaver, you have the benefit of up-to-date advice from your careers service. You should be informed about the new Youth Training Scheme for those who do not go on to full-time education. The need to register at a Jobcentre will have been explained. But because you are now part of the "system" you should not simply sit back. Do some independent thinking. You are the best person to help yourself. Use your initiative and tackle the job hunt as a real occupation: this will have the extra advantage of establishing the habit of work see your task as a challenge from which you can even extract some fun. Life may be serious but need not be miserable. A business like approach is the people who work the party machine as the careers officer, friends and relatives may have suggestions; look at small as well as large advertiments in the press and at cards in newsagents; commercial employment agencies are especially good for office work; factory noticeboards are anoyler source. Be ready to take any work, odd jobs, tempory or even voluntary work. No experience is ever wasted and you will be more attractive to potential employer if you can show what uou gave done by your own

Having noted possible openings, submit applications. Pull out all the stops at once. It is useless writing one letter at a time, waiting for a reply, being turned down and starting again from sciatch. Keep records. List vacancies, the dates you asked for details, when your application was sent in and a reply received. Draw up a curriculum vitae. This saves you time when filling in employers' forms.

One tip which will help you to send in a tidy application is to photocopy the firm's form, complete that copy and then transfer your details to the original.

The purpose of your letter, which must be tailored to each vacancy, is to achieve an interview. If you are offered one you have done well. Again, preparation will enable you to make the most of this opportunity. Find out all you can about the organization. Think up questions the interviewer may ask and decide how you would answer. You are likely to be asked if you have any yourself so jot some down beforehand. Your appearance and manner plus your qualidications will assist the inter-viewer to decide whether you are the person for the job so take care and above all arrive in good time.

If you have no luck, this is not necessarily your fault. Remember that you are competing with others. Keep up your morale by realizing that employers do not interview more candidates than they must and at least you were thought worth seeing.
Meantime, you have had some practice which you can turn to good account next time.

Robert Duvell is superb as General Eisenhower in the three-part IKE (Channel 4 10.10pm) beginning tonight. The film, cleverly moding archive material with the acting, begins with the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor.

Elsenhower, a one-star General is given a deak job by tive-star General Marshalf (Dans Andrews) but quickly finds himself posted to London where he has an inauspicious first meeting with Kay Summersby, his driver, later to become his mistress. Lee Remick acts bravely with, for her, a banal script, but as the film is based on Miss Summersby's book we must take as accurate Miss Remick's portrayal of the divorces. With a copped, very un-Lambeth like accent, Miss Summersby sweeps a bemused US Major Arnold off his feet at the same time making nerself indispensible to the General, Ian Richardson gives his usual bravura performance as Montgomery with Wensley Pithey a creditable Winston Churchill. A riveting film when there is some action but the few sentimental scenes are somewhat of an embarrassment.

First performed at the Royal Court ten years ago, Ted Whitehead's THE SEA ANCHOR (Radio 4 8.00pm) has been adapted for radio by the author and stars Jonathan Pryce and Michael Angells as Les and Andy, two of a group of five friends who take a k-end's jaunt to Dublin from their native Liverpoot. Four of them take the ferry while the fifth decides to sail across the Irish Sea in his dinghy. The four await the arrival of their intrepid friend on the jetty, trief interpol triefed on the jedy, drinking lots of strong liquour under a biazing sun. As night draws in the weather turns nesty as does the once lighthearted, boozy, banter and an air of aggression settles on the quartet. Mr Whitehead's clever, slightly menacing, script is powerfully acted by both Pryce and Angelis.

There is a welcome repeat this evening of Francis Watson's examination of the life and work of Eric GM. Cyril Shaps is the voice of GM in TO HELL WITH CULTURE (Radio 3.7.00pm) and with a little help from, among others, Sir John Rothenstein and Gill's biographer, Malcolm Yorke, Watson brings to life the extraordinary stone carver, engraver and typographer.

David Steel: Soaring high towards polling day

Julian Haviland, Political Editor, talks to David Steel of the Liberals in the first of a series of interviews with the four party leaders

How much sleep do you get? Not enough, is the short answer. It varies - never more than six hours and usually nearer five. This to me is a great deprivation. I'm hopeless in the early morning and I find these early morning press conferences a tremendous strain. How do you get the newspapers

I don't - not first thing in the morning. Somebody else reads them for me - John Pardoe and Paul Tyler, who draw to my attention anything of significance. What milage are you doing? About 5,000 miles on the road as well as the air travel. Are you trying to cover the whole country or do you concentrate on of potential Alliance strength? By a process of zig-zagging we have, in fact, covered the whole country, and I had a hunch the election was going to be on June 9 and the weekend before it was announced I shot off up to Orkney and Shetland, which I could not possibly have done during the campaign itself. Is it important that your constituents should not think you take them for granted?

They don't think that, partly because I pride myself on being a very assiduous constituency MP between elections so they forgive my absences during elections, but my life has been made slightly easier because the size of my constituency had been reduced and there are fewer places to to visit.

Has the fact that it is a joint campaign with the SDP reduced the load or added to the complications?

It has added to the complications; but one of the pleasant surprises of the campaign has been how few the complications are. I thought at the beginning that it was going to be a nightmare because every decision I took would have to be referred to the gang of four; but the joint headquarters operation has worked like a dream, and there has been no strain or tension in the Alliance campaign at all. As a result I have been able to add more commitments to my daily programme, including more SDP

If, after polling day, the Liberal Party has a dozen or more MPs and the SDP only one or two - if the SDP fails, will you much care? You are talking as though this was last week. I don't really think this is a possibility. Had we stuck at the levels of support we were at the beginning of the campaign we would have to face that nightmare; but I think now that the level of support we are getting - and I must assume that it goes on rising towards polling day, is going to be sufficient to ensure that the SDP is there in appreciable numbers. Are you not just talking up support, because your potential voters need to be persuaded that you are on your way? But I have been quite accurate in my predicitions so far. I have said all the way through the campaign, do not expect any movement intil half way through. That was right. The movement came half way through and it is now rising steeply. Where I was wrong is that I did not expect I always support to collapse so quickly.

Most of the SDP MPs have taken their political lives in their hands by forming their new party, whereas the Liberals are fighting most of the most winnable seats. Has there not been an inequality of risk between the two partners? It's very difficult to say. If we got the traditional Liberal result, the answer would be "yes" because the SDP would have great diffi-culty in having enough members to survive. But we are not now contemplating failure and if there is a more substantial swing from Labour than we anticipated at the start of the campaign, the SDP could be the main beneficiaries because they have taken on more of the seats where the Labour vote has to be diverted.

6 Growing doubts in the Tory camp about unemployment and the leadership style

If they were reduced to a rump would you expect them to join the Liberal Party? We have no commitment on this whatever. We have always said this is an alliance for this election. We are going to work together in the next Parliament whatever happens. Precisely how depends on the outcome and we have three

We can either keep this Alliance as two separate parties working together or particularly if we could get electoral reform we shall be able to go our separate ways entirely as parties do on much of the Continent and fight against each other, but still be prepared to work together in Parliament, or we could go the other way - and the two parties will have to reflect on this in a mature way - and we could decide we ought to take the route towards

If David Owen emerges as the strongest figure in the SDP, could you see him wanting to come in under your leadership in a joint

You would have to ask him that. How are you getting on with him? David has always had a slightly more prickly relationship with me than the other members of the gang of four. He is that sort of

He is also your sort of age, and a rival in that sense? Well, I don't think it stems from any rivalry. I don't think there is any antagonism between us on those grounds. We had a genuine difference of view about how the two parties should develop. I have always been quite open about it I thought the two parties should move very closely together and campaign closely together, whereas he felt from the beginning that I was in danger of suffocating the SDP.

Now that is a perfectly straight-forward view and he maintained it very firmly during the time that he was parliamentary leader of the SDP. The truth is that we get on extremely well together. What do you think will turn out to have been the decisive issues? On policy there are two issues First of all, the doubts about the government's rightness in pursuing with vigour the policy of unemployment as a means to salvation. I think there are growing doubts inside the Conservative camp itself about the style and the nature of society that the present Tory leadership speaks to, and I think that is going to bring a lot of one-nation Conservative voters to us towards the end, especially now that the fear of the return of a Labour government is removed. The second issue is the one which brought the Alliance about - reshaping politics. We have been greatly assisted by the divisions in the Labour Party, not just over the issue of defence but the whole question of Militant Tendency candidates and the inadequate grasp which the leadership has of the turmoil inside the party. I think people feel it is just not an acceptable alternative government and therefore the chance is there for us to fill that void.

6 Healey and Hattersley both subscribed to a manifesto in which they didn't believe?

Has there been a decisive moment? There have been mistakes in the campaign. The basic-mistake by the Labour Party was for people like Healey and Hattersley to have actually started a campaign subscribing to a manifesto in which they did not believe. The Hattersley approach was: "We are a democratic party and whatever rubbish is in the manifesto, I support it." That is not an intellectually honest position. Under cross-examination in the campaign it all unravelled.

Do you think the Prime Minister's character and personality have proved important? She provides positive leadership, but going round the country I am always mystified about the gap between the obvious high poll ratings she enjoys and the very strong dislike of her style of leadership among ordinary voters. I have always found she is a very strong leader, a very capable leader, and I disagree fundamen-tally with the direction in which she is trying to lead the country. I think she has no understanding of

- and, more important - very little sympathy with how the other half

If she gets her landslide majority, what do you think will be the effect on the Tory party?

I should have thought it would be disastrous. Really some of the candidates they are putting up - I am not just talking about one or two with links with the National Front - I find there is a breed of new Conservative candidate which is frankly unpleasant. There is an abrasive quality, an uncaring quality, in the old terms a very right-wing quality about many of the Tory candidates. The generality of candidates are of the Right and if there was a big Conservative majority I think the generality of the Conservative Party would be.

Letter from Atlantic City

Casinos hit the jackpot but the rest go bust wretched dump of a town. Five years and billions of dollars later it is a rich, wretched dump of a town with some of America's most disgusting poverty alongside some of its most fabulous

Wherever the money is going it is not sweetening the stench of the slums and shettos that spread haphazardly out for all who care to see just around the corner from the neon madness.

At weekends it is a crazed town, with hundreds of thousands of people from Philadel-phia, New York, Boston and farther afield descending in countless numbers of coaches, aircraft and cars. Last week-end with the Frazier-Bugner fight (report, page 22) you could hardly move. There was not a vacant hotel room in

It all seems so incongruous. Outside the casino hotels there is nothing, absolutely nothing, save for the poor little houses, a couple of middle-class suburbs and several tedious miles of marshland.

Nowadays the city that not so long ago was the grand old lady of the East Coast, whose gentility and sophistication was attested by the smart young people who came to spend the season, is as much a gambling town as Las Vagas.

Nobody knows that more than the Las Vegas casino owners who year by year are watching their takings disappear into the ever-deepening pockets of the Atlantic City operators. The word is around, futhermore, that the Mafia has been moving money out of Las Vegas and into Atlantic City.

The famous Boardwalk exists no more in the old spirit. It is dominated by flashing casino hotels, nine glittering buildings whose impact has been fast, phenomenal and irreversible. They bring 23 million people a year to this miserable little place. They generate $1,500m (£1,000m) of revenue a year. They have sent rent and property prices through the

They are also the reason why there is serious talk of a $205m redevelopment plan to raze the ravaged wateland of the city's inlet area - the worst of the slums - and build offices, shops and houses for rich and poor.

Whether it will happen is a

Before the casinos came, Atlantic City was a poor, judging by the farce of what judging by the farce of what the city calls its grand plan - a blueprint drawn up several years ago on how the windfall of revenues from the casinos should be spent, for the betterment of the 47,000 permanent residents.

The people of the Inlet -mostly blacks and Hispanies are fearful and have put up a sign high on the wall of one of the slum buildings: "We live here. We are going to stay here in the South Inlet."

They are wrong. The land is owned by speculators and slums devalue the prices. Consequently there has been a steady 3,000 cases of arson a year for the past three years and the Hispanic population alone has plummeted from 5.000 to 1,500.

Nearly six years ago the New Jersey legislature legalized casino gambling in Atlantic City as "a unique tool of urban redevelopment". The casinos, it was argued, would turn the crumbling old town into a gem of the New Jersey

The first casino opened and nothing has been the same since. At least 100 seaside stores have been driven out by land-hungry casino ators and countless operators and countless numbers of small-time merchants selling hot dogs and curios to the day-trippers have silently faded away.

The gambling emporiums are regulated by the Casino Control Commission, which decides everything from how the casinos can advertise themselves to the percentage the slot machines have to pay out. But at times the fivemember commission seems to be no match for the skill of the gambling entrepreneurs, and even now they are frantically redrafting a loophole that allowed the operators to escape a rule requiring them to reinvest a portion of revenues into city redevelopment.

Atlantic City has received phenomenal sums of money from city taxes, much of which has financed a huge reduction in property rates. The folks in the Inlet have not benefited, however they have to pay anything up to $450 a month rent for their squalid houses.

The dream of rebuilding Atlantic City has proved elusive, and only time will tell if the greatest gamble of its history will pay off.

Nature notes

Birds are at all stages of nesting. hidden in deep foliage, will survive, though the rain has washed out the nests of some blackbirds and song-thrushes. Garden warblers and blackcaps are sitting on their mottled eggs loose, grassy nests, usually in brambles or honeysuckle. There are bright green young in the domed nests of the willow warblers – they crouch on a soft bed made of two or three hundred feathers, sometimes with their tails in the entrance. The adult willow warblers will try to lure a cut or human away, calling with a pleading note, and trailing a wing as if it were broken. Young carrion crows are out in the fields: they hop heavily after their parents, still expecting to be fed.

Most trees are in leaf, but because Most trees are in leaf; but because the leafing has been so long drawnout, this year there has not been that remarkable moment when all the trees are simultaneously at the full and in their freshest green. Horse-chestnut flowers are falling; the white blossoms reveal a deep pink mark at their centre as they wither. Hawthorn flowers are also suffused with pink as they fade.

National Day

Swedes celebrates its national flag day today. It commemorates the day in 1809 when a new constitution was introduced, separating the powers of the king and the Riksdag (parliament). King Gustav IV Adolf was deposed, following the defeat of Sweden by the Russians, and a new king was sought. The following year the French Marshal Jean Baptiste Bernadotte was chosen as successor to the throne. The 1809 constitution lasted until 1974 and the successors of Bernadotte still sit on the Swedish throne.

The papers

The Sanday Times would like to see the Alliance get a sizeable share of the vote on Thursday. "It would be desirable that there should be no Tory landslide, which could unleash the forces of illiberalism lying not far beneath the surface of modern Conservatism."

The Observer asks whether Mrs Thatcher has the flexibility and vision to put her understanding and exercise of power to the uses the country really needs. "What she wants is an effective Opposition to carb some of her wayward instincts," the paper concludes.

Mrs Thatcher's administration, warts and all, has earned reelection and offers the only hopeful course, says The Sunday Telegraph. "A second Tory term is the natural choice of sensible men and women."
